HOW TO KEEP WELL

A FEW SUGGESTIONS TO MAINTAIN HEALTH

Undernourishment and its side partner, undevelopment.

Defective teeth and their side partners, digestive disorders, and disease.

Diseased tonsils and adenoids resulting in the destruction of the first line of defense against the present germ.

So far as undernourishment is concerned, he says that most often it is due not to lack of food, but to over indulgence in the wrong kinds of food to a diet made up too largely of starchy foods, sweets, and meats. "Every child," he continues, "for the first eighteen yars of life, at least needs a quart of milk every day. Eggs, liver, sweetbreads, cabbage, greens, salads fruits, whole wheat and graham breads should also be eaten regularly."

As to defective teeth, he points out the fact that the kinds of food mentioned are necessary for the formation of strong teeth; that the first cause of defective teeth is defective feeding; and that another cause is lack of care. He says, "if teeth are allowed to decay and their usefulness becomes impaired, there is bound to be an extra burden thrown upon the digestive system. The poisons produced by, and in, germ infested teeth and gums get into the blood stream and are carried to every part of the body, causing damage to, or destruction of any of the vital organs."

Undernourishment, due to the lack of the right sort of foods, lowers the vitality of the system, and makes it less resistant to disease. This is especially true of tonsils and adenoids. "When they have become diseased," Dr. Stone says, "they cease to become a 'first line of defense' against germs. Rather they become a hotbed in which any kind of germ may lodge and grow to its great delight and advantage. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, and rheumatism are diseases that a child with a sound healty throat has but little cause to fear. These diseases are responsible for a large part of all the deafness heart and kidney disease of later life..

"Eyes, too, are often permanently damaged by such diseases as scarlet fever and diphtheria.....No part of the body is more important than the eyes, so they should be safeguarded."

Should the physical examinations of children in the schools reveal any of the conditions pointed out in the message, parents are urged to lose no time in taking the children to their family physicians and to have the conditions corrected.
