POULTRY NOTES

ITEMS THAT WILL INTEREST OUR READERS FROM MANY SOURCES

Fully realizing and appreciating the great magnitude to which America's poultry industry has developed during the last decade; appreciating its great economic importance in our national scheme of human food production; and appreciating the almost universal interest which our people have, either in the production or consumption of eggs, the National Poultry Council, which is a delegate organization representing the production and allied branches of the poultry industry, has by proclamation, set aside May Day, 1926 as "NATIONAL EGG DAY." The National Poultry Council is organizing state and national committees to develop and promote appropriate observances of "NATIONAL EGG DAY." This day will be celebrated in the various states as the respective state committees see fit. It will be a day in which to pay homage to an industry that stands fifth among our agricultural pursuits as measured by the value of products produced. It will be a day to spread the message of the peculiar, protective properties possessed by eggs in our human diet. It will be a day in which every branch of the poultry industry can preach the gospel of the importance of poultry husbandry and poultry products in the every day practice of feeding our people.

The parasitic disease called coccidissis is the one that is hardest to eliminate. These spores can, I believe, live in the soil for many years ready to start on their deadly mission when the young birds are again placed on the same ground. Five per cent (5 per cent) carbolic acid will not readily kill them nor will heat under a temperature of that of steam. Since the Experiment Station has discovered these facts, do you not see the reason why it is important that those hobble-de-hoys in your brooder house with their bright eyes and plump little bodies must be kept off contaminated soil? Do you know that even one hour spent on infested soil is liable to place a curse within them that will ruin their entire career? You say, "Yes, but my brooder house is stationary and anyone who knows 'beans' about chicks, knows that they should some in contact with mother earth at an early age." Folks, it will pay you to fence off a run for these chicks and fill in this run with absolutely clean soil, gravel or sand. When the chicks are big enough and the weather is nice and warm ground on which no eggs have been deposited, no worms will develop in the birds. But just as sure as they are allowed to run on contaminated soil you can count on some "wrecks."

Standing at the threshhold of another turkey season those who have in years past raised turkeys will look backward at past experiences, and, too, will look forward and conjecture what the coming season has in store. Were microphones as common in country homes today as are telephones, many are the questions the air would bring during the next few months from the new crop of would-be beginners at turkey raising who are sure to step forward this year, just as they have done every year in the past, and will do every year while turkeys inhabit the earth.

There are many things that come into consideration when establishing the value of the poultry flock. The The average flock as a whole, may be valuable and profitable, and yet there may be many individuals which are not profitable. The individual hen's value may vary, depending largely on who is the owner, and his skill and ability to bring out the best quality. And then quality is very often a matter of opinion.

To one person certain qualities of the hen may appeal more strongly than to another person. To establish the value of a poultry flock you should subdivide the study under two co-ordinate heads, which again should be subdivided as follows:

1—Investment in poultry houses, feed barn, brooder houses, incubators and other necessary appliances.
2—Cost of the flock.
3—Labor costs.
4—Value of feed consumed.
5—General expenses.
6—Ability to convert feed into eggs and meat.
7—Value of eggs, chick, broilers, meat produced.
8—Value of manure and feathers.
9—Number of years of profitable performance.
10—Meat value of individual hens and cocks at end of usefulness.
Appearance.
Disposition.

As a rule the financial and economic value of the hen does not receive the study and attention which it demands. Many people who keep chickens, hatch, feed and sell eggs, broilers and live and dressed fowl, without making any effort in ascertaining what their financial returns are whether their poultry business is really a profit to them or whether it is actually carried on profitable.

—Judge Morris A. Soper, in the United States District Court, last Thursday presided at the trial of a suit for $150,000 against the Eastern Shore Ferry Company, instituted by Edward Clothier of Rock Hall.
