Farmers, List Your Repair Needs

It would be hard to find a farmer who at some time or another had not lost valuable time waiting for necessary repair parts. Take this territory and total up the time lost in this way and it will astonish you. And all because repairs are not odered as early as they should be.

There is no better time than right now—just before the busiest season on the farm—to go over your machines carefully, make a list of repairs you are likely to need and send it to us. With this list in our hands, we can order our stock so as to be prepared to meet every call promptly.

Repair part service is a necessary part of our business. We realize what it means to you in time and money to get what you need at once. Help us to help you by making up your list now and sending it in to us.

POULTRY NOTES

ITEMS THAT WILL AID OUR READERS WITH THEIR PROBLEMS

It is getting the time of the year that we are through with most of the breeding pen birds as far as eggs for hatching are concerned, and the pens may now be broken up, with the possible exception of one or two, which may be retained in case of an emergency. We believe the majority of the amateur breeders do not fully appreciate the value of the old hens for breeders and are inclined to dispose of them as soon as the breeding season is over, depending each year upon the young pullets for their breeders. There is no greater drawback to success in breeding quality, size and vigor in a flock than to year after year use the young birds in the breeding pens. It it true the early pullet may lay more eggs when the anxiety to fill the incubators early in the season is so strong, but if careful tests are made with a pen of young birds, also with a pen of two or three-year-old hens mated to a vigorous yearling or two or three-year-old cock bird, and records as to hardiness, growth and all desirable qualities are kept it will be found always in favor of the old pen of birds, all things being equal.

The eggs are larger, hatch better, chicks stronger, grow faster and develop larger bone and are more husky, vigorous birds when hatched from the young birds mating. Again, in mating the hens you have a fully developed bird to judge the type; one that is rounded out in all sections, and you know to a reasonable degree of certainty what to expect from them. We regard the two- to five-year-old hens and cock birds of inestimable value as breeders.

If more of the eggs shipped for hatching were from matured birds that had passed the first adult molt, there would be fewer kicks on chicks dying in the shell and the mortality would be greatly reduced.

We will, however, leave these things as they are and return to the breeding birds. The best individuals which are to be retained or breeders the following season should be selected and placed where they can have a liberal range in some well shaded lot. We were never entirely "struck" on giving our birds absolutely free range after the breeding season. A good sized pen or yard that has an abundance of natural green food, plenty of shade, containing a good roomy colony house is preferred to free range. In yards they all steal their nests away and give us no ways remain tame, never get wild and trouble when they are to be confined again in the breeding pens. They should never be forced for eggs.

Now that real summer weather is here, it becomes increasingly hard for poultrymen to keep up their enthusiasm to the point where mash hoppers, water fountains, miteless houses, clean scratch litter, fresh vegetables and leaf greens are quite as important as they were when chicks were small. The real proof of the poultryman's mettle is in his summertime enthusiasm. "THE WILL TO DO" the essential things—plus—means a flock of thrifty, vigorous pullets that will give a good account of themselves when placed in laying quarters.

As a rule, the beginner in poultry culture starts out with a whole lot of enthusiasm. I believe in it. I believe it is the proper spirit, and shows a wideawake condition. But, at the same time, I believe enthusiasm should be somewhat tempered. If unrestricted it is apt to build air castles—it is apt to expect too much.

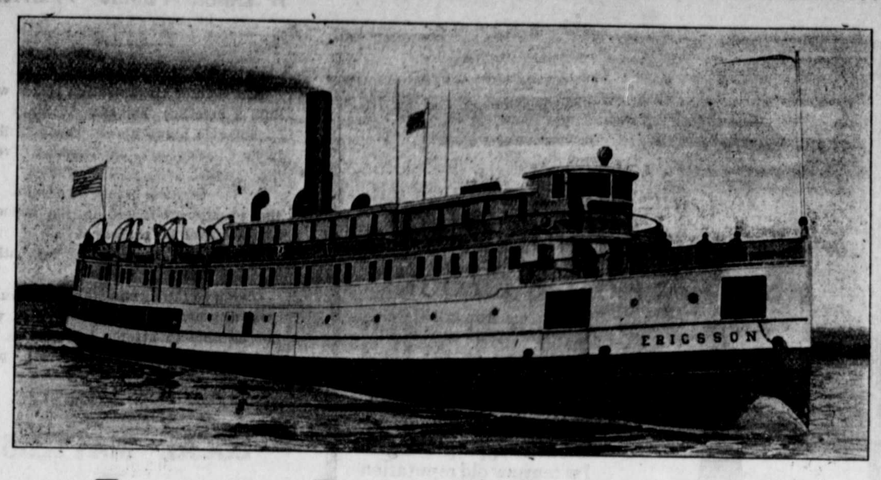

In other words, the too enthusiastic is prone to overestimate the capacity of both the plant and the man. Enthusiasm should be balanced by at least a little common sense. Be optimistic, but not over-confident.

Some men tire quickly. The constant sameness makes the work monotonous. The business gets a black eye before it has had a proper test. All business require enthusiasm. Without it they would be short lived.

In starting there must be an object in view. There must be a standard set. The harder a man works to attain that object, the sooner will he meet with success. Every muscle must be bent to the proper performance of that work. The man who starts with the thought only of growing rich, would make money by selling out at once at half pice. The longer he continues, the poorer he becomes.

In the life of a poultryman there will be days when things do not look bright. If he is a pessimist he will lose faith. It is one of those dark clouds that every now and then loom up in the horizon, not only in the horizon, not only in the poultry business, but in every other vocation. It is then when the faint-hearted believe the days of success have long since gone by. It has been my experience that when a man reaches that condition of mind, and does not notice a silver lining in those dark clouds, he had better give up the ship. Men of that caliber are to be pitied.

One hundred and thirty-four thousand dollars will do a great many things besides founding a model poultry ranch. Yet Carl Laemmle, motion picture magnate and veteran producer, does not regret his indulgence in his favorite hobby.
