ALL THE WORLD IS SAYING "HAVE A CAMEL"

Why does Camel lead the world?

The answer is Quality. Camels contain the choicest Turkish and Domestic tobaccos grown . . . such blending as is found in no other cigarette. . . . Care and skill that stop at no expense. When you buy a pack of Camels you get the finest cigarettes made, regardless of price.

Increasing millions who've smoked other brands now smoke Camels. Every week, every day, Camel wins and holds a growing army of experienced smokers. Since smoking began, Camel popularity is the greatest ever known.

Camel smokers are the most enthusiastic body of smokers in the world —for Camels never tire the taste, never leave a cigaretty after-taste. Camels are a lifetime of smoking pleasure.

Just try a Camel and taste the smoke from nature's choicest tobaccos. . . . Find the mildness and mellowness that have taught the whole world to say, "Have a Camel!"

Home Values Increase

IF the home is of modern architecture and practical construction. Why build a new home from the plans of an old design?

A designor of women's apparel would hardly fashion the fabrics of today into a model of ten years ago. Why then build a home from a plan that has been duplicated for the past decade?

The designs presented in our Plan Book are of the newest possible to suggest. We'll be pleased to quote you on any of the homes and to recommend a reliable contractor, should it be desired.

World Slow to Hail Genius of Hawthorne

Some of us know that great as Nathaniel Hawthorne was, it was not until 1837 that through the persuasion of his friends he allowed himself to publish some of his stories in book form, under the title, "Twice Told Tales," says Dr. Frank H. Vizetelly. The tales were received coldly and proved that their author could not live upon his literary earnings. At Bowdoin he wrote "Seven Tales of My Native Land," a manuscript which, after many journeys to publishers, was consigned to the flames. After that he wrote his first novel, "Fanshawe," published in 1828, but it received chilly reception. In 1825 he joined his mother and sister at Salem, where the ladies lived in seclusion.

Here Hawthorne led the life of a recluse, seeing little of the members of his family, having most of his meals served alone and rarely taking exercise save after dark. He wrote once to a friend: "We do not live at our house," then announced his intention of taking up literature as a profession. A second series of "Twice Told Tales" and "Mosses From an Old Manse" obtained small profit for their author, who in 1851 complained that for many years he was "the obscurest man of letters in America."

This was the author of that immortal work, "The Scarlet Letter," which he published in 1850, and followed with "The House of the Seven Gables," and "The Blythedale Romance," three books that are universally acknowledged ranking among the literary masterpieces of the world.

Popular Johnny Cake Traced to Shawnees

It has been generally claimed by students of words that "Johnny cake" is a corruption of "journey cake." Apparently there is no evidence to support the theory. Will H. Lowdermilk, in his History of Cumberland, has advanced a theory which seems to be more plausible. A favorite article of diet among the Shawnee Indians who lived in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Ohio was a cake made of corn beaten as fine as the means at command would permit. This was mixed with water and baked on a flat stone which had been previously heated in the fire. The early hunters and trappers in this region followed the example of the Indians in making these cakes, which they called "Shawnee cakes," after the tribe. After the lapse of a few years "Shawnee cake" was corrupted by those who did not know its origin into "Johnny cake."

Noiseless Auction

A noiseless auction is the latest boon to mankind that has come out of Holland. It sounds impossible, but the scheme is simple. Everybody who attends the auction and wants to bid is provided with a seat. Each chair is numbered, and connected with wires to a big dial on the auctioneer's platform. On the dial are numbers representing prices from the lowest to the highest amounts.

When the sale begins, the auctioneer describes his wares, and then calls for bids. The hand on the dial on the platform starts to move up the range of prices, and whenever any bidder wants to drop out, he signals such by pressing the button on his chair. When all have dropped out but one, a bell rings and a light flashes on the dial board, and the highest bid is thus ascertained without any noise or confusion.

Tibetan Customs

In Tibet it is the custom of the natives when meeting friends to stick out their tongues as a mark of respect. A peasant who would accost a person of higher caste without doing this would be regarded as grossly discourteous.

Another custom is the "scarf of welcome." When calling upon a Tibetan gentleman it is necessary to send a servant in advance with a white scarf which is presented to the host, and he then presents a similar one to the guest. The scarf the visitor takes away he presents to another official on his next visit.

Such social visits always entail tea drinking as well, no matter what time of day it is. Tea in Tibet is emulsified with butter flavored with soda, so that it is really more like soup than tea.—F. K. Ward, in the Wide World.

Medical Mistletoe

In the former days it was believed that the mistletoe had some mysterious medicinal virtues, but, it was thought, to become a really efficacious remedy all mistletoe used medicinally must be plucked from an oak tree upon which the parasite rarely grows. It was considered unlucky to cut this, or to sell it. In 1657 the only oak known to bear mistletoe grew in Norwood, Eng. Some persons cut this mistletoe and sold pieces to London apothecaries at 10 shillings each. Accordingly we read that of these "sacrilegious wretches one fell lame, each of the others lost an eye, and the ringleader broke his leg."

Oh, Because

A little boy, seeing a glass eye in a shop window, asked what it was, and, being told, inquired if people could see with false eyes. He was told that they couldn't.

A day or two later he wished to know whether people could eat with false teeth, and was told that they could.

"Then, if people can eat with false teeth," he said, "why can't they see with false eyes?"—Tit-Bits.

Fish Can Live on Land

The mud springing fishes of the tropical waters of Africa, Asia and Australia prefer to seek their food out of the water. They live like frogs on marshy or muddy ground among the mangrove swamps or along the shore between tide marks. Sometimes with the aid of their tail and ventral fins and clever bending of the body they clamber up stems and slide along branches. When discovered or disturbed they drop back from the branches, several feet above, into the mud below and are able to remain out of the water for hours together.—Kansas City Times.
