THE TALK O' THE STATE

This gossips all about:
"So G. O. P.'s passed out;
His interfering snout
Was busted in the bout.

The feeble thrusts he tried
To tattoo on Berts' hide,
Were swept down with the tide
Of Conowingo's Pride."

WE again call the attention of residents of Chestertown to the trash containers that are left in front of the homes after they have been emptied by the town wagons. This is indeed an eyesore, not only to the residents themselves but to visitors, and can be easily remedied.

Mud Hole Neck
Nov. 12, 1926

Dear Nell:

It is such a pleasure to live in the country these days, it is a wonder that some of the residents of Chestertown who are still fortunate enough to own a farm, are willing to let another fellow live in such a happy way, on their land. They keep two establishments running, and allow themselves to be subjected to the noises of the streets, and to the proximity of an unfriendly neighbor.

A generation ago, those who lived in the country, were making a great sacrifice for the sake of tilling the land and feeding the city, now we are making no sacrifice, for in the country we have all the advantages of the city without its disadvantages.

Out near Emporia, Kansas, where I come from, we don't want a cook or a washerwoman, they would be as much use as chiffon stockings in mosquito season. WE press a button, the dinner cooks; we press another the clothes wash we have ice all summer, and heat all winter. Even way down in Texas, they say, there's a circuit barber shop for sheep, with a machine that shears 150 sheep a day, with a shingle for the women, gratis. We listen to concerts choosing one from any city, VIA. radio; our cows are not disturbed so early in the morning because of the efficiency of the electric milker; while down at Las Moras ranch, the mother hens play barn yard bridge, and the electric incubator hatches their chicks. The hens are more contented; they can have their little snack any time during the night, by the light of the Delco Plant; no, this is not advertising matter, it is a matter of bringing before Kent Countains the fact that they are missing many pleasures and advantages, by not living on their farms. The country has progressed along with the city; with the exception of the roads; they are the same as usual. The county commissioners realize we must not have all the luxuries at once, or we might forget that we are really country folk, so a little mud once in a while brings us down to earth. The roads will come later.

It is said farming does not pay it can be made to pay through cooperation with existing organizations, and a little forethought. Secure your market first, then adapt your farming system accordingly.

If the townspeople are not careful, some of these thrifty Northerners or Westerners, will buy up the most desirable water fronts, and farm land, reclaim the marsh land, send the produce over the Delmarva Bridge, and fly over to Baltimore in their planes to see a good show. Thus Kent Countians will have sold their birth right; the reins will be taken from them and they will be shoved into the background by the foresighted newcomer. Hoping you are enjoying the beans,

Yours for living on a farm,
Elsie Dee.

The theory of "Four Dimensions" has no place in the mind of the man or company who is face to face with the problem of selecting a suitable banking connection.

Three dimensions, and only three, enter into this problem, and if they are found to be right, the problem is solved for all time. If you consider this bank as your bank, you will find the dimensions" to be:
