ANY ONE who may have had any doubts as to the efficiency of and effective work by the Chestertown Volunteer Fire Company should have witnessed their splendid work at the fire on High street, Chestertown, on Wednesday. The work of our fire-fighters is becoming more and more appreciated each day by our citizens. Their work is unquestionably worthy of support by every citizens of this community. Thousands upon thousands of dollars of property have been saved to this community by their unselfish and willing efforts at all hours of the day or night. Give them the support and encouragement they so richly deserve.

COMMUNIATED

As the legislature convenes all eyes are turned towards Annapolis, for it is upon our represenatives and the laws they make, that the prosperity of Maryland depends: Maryland! beautiful Maryland flanked on the west by rich mineral bearing mountains and bathed on the east by the ocean, while in her arms she holds the Chesapeake Bay, with its bays and rivers yielding the finest oysters, water ducks and fisheries in the world.

The late Bishop Lay used to tell when he was in London and was invited to visit the Archbisop of Canterbury, the latter said. "I have the finest thing in the world for dinner, Chesapeake Canvass back ducks," and so every where one hears of the products of the Chesapeake and its waters, and fish hatcheries, planting oysters on barren grounds, conserving the wild ducks and other game is a much moated question.

Maryland's very shape, the crescent, seems to promise increasing prosperity.

One of the laws to be discussed is the oyster law. It is a vital question to Marylands prosperity and to those who make their living out of this industry. As the saying goes, "Marylanders may be Democrats or Republicans but oystermen most of all. Two years ago when the oysters was thought to have germs of typhoid, many of the lower eastern shore towns had their business paralyzed by the ban placed upon the sale of them until it was found that those furnished by the Chesapeake were, Wholesome and sanitary. Mr. James Beck, an authority on Constitutional law, as well as a delightful and convincing speaker, in a lecture last winter told the following incident: Being young and just embarking on politics, he was sent over to the Eastern Shore to make stump speeches in a campaign. With him was an old men very illiterate but well versed on the oyster question and he always followed Mr. Beck's, speeches with a talk on oysters. The campaign was successful and Mr. Beck was warmly congratulated by his fellow politicians on his success. Soon after he met his old colleague in Philadelphia. "So we won after all," said Mr. Beck, thinking the old man would compliment him, on his work, but he replied, "Yes, it was the oysters that did it" So, all Marylanders are in a state of watchful waiting, hoping that those who they have chosen to represent them will make laws beneficial to the whole state.
