Good Health Requires Good Elimination

ONE can't feel well when there is a retention of poisonous waste in the blood. This is called a toxic condition, and is apt to make one tired, dull and languid. Other symptoms are sometimes toxic backaches and headaches. That the kidneys are not functioning properly is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Many people have learned the value of Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, when the kidneys seem functionally inactive. Everywhere one finds enthusiastic Doan's users. Ask your neighbor!

Baltimore Barber Routs Rheumatism

Herman P. Brill, 2439 Fleet Street, almost crippled for ten years, recovers perfect health and feels fine. Gives full credit to Tanlac for marvelous aid

"I could hardly raise my hand to my head," said Mr. Brill, in telling of his experience. "Rheumatism caused terrible pains in my back and shoulders that nearly crippled me, and to make matters worse, stomach trouble and indigestion developed. It was a great effort for me to raise my arms while working on my customers.

"Between nervousness and pain, sleep was out of the question. I rolled from side to side all night, and could not rest easily in any position. My appetite disappeared, too, and I had to force myself to swallow a little food. Even that would lie like a lump in my stomach for hours. I tried almost every known medicine in those ten years; nothing helped me till I started on Tanlac. Since then my headaches and stomach troubles have disappeared and the rheumatism has ceased to bother me. I'm a new man altogether."

Tanlac is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from roots, barks and herbs. If you are rundown and in poor shape, build back with the help of Tanlac. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

TO HALT DESIANS OF WRONGDOERS

OTHER TIMELY HINTS.

BY FREDERIC J. ASKIN, OF WASHINGTON, IN THE BALTIMORE SUN

On the door of the fish market down by the wharves in Washington is a sign—"No use breaking in. Sent money to bank." On the safe in the local office of a great national corporation is the lettered invitation, "It's not locked; help yourself."

These are what might be termed signs of the times. They reflect the reaction of business men to conditions which they can not combat and over which the police have little or no control. Why bolt the door when it can be jimmied so easily? Why lock the safe when it can be opened like a child's bank or a can of soup? Why try to protect whatever of value you have when it can't be done? Why not invite the unwelcome guests to help themselves, and make it as easy as possible for them to do that? They'll get it, anyhow, so why not hand it to them?

And save the safe! That sounds like an Irish bull, and perhaps it is, but it is the motto in many establishments between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Any regular office or business house must have a safe. It's a part of the scenery without which the show would not go over. A safe suggests assets. It is there to guard something of great value. Conversely, if there is no safe, then there is nothing about the place worth having. But why have a safe when it is cracked or blown open every few weeks and ultimately ruined.

Time was, too, when safes were safe. Yeggmen and petermen confined their operations to banks and an occasional postoffice. The steel cubes that stood in the rear of small stores and in the back room in offices were immune. The professionals looked upon trapping them much as a Cleopatra would regard the enticing of a college freshman—mere cradle snatching. But, came the war, came prohibition, and came whatever else it is that contributes to present day lawless conditions. Brigandage, banditry, and burglary flourished. Old-fashioned operators with pride in their profession, who would no more think of cracking a safe in a delicatessen than they would of attacking the poorbox in a church with a can opener, have been largely superseded by a new school of outlaws who have no inhibitations.

All They Want Is Money.

They go after anything that has money in it, in whatever amount. Where the yegg of the good old days would never tackle a job unless it held out the promise of all the cash of a prosperous bank—loot that could be counted by the thousands—the modern thief is glad to have a try at a crib that may yield only a few hundreds.

Moreover, he has learned that small shop keepers and chain stores at certain times in the week or in the month have considerable sums of money on hand and are ripe for plucking, and that as a rule the safes are pitifully easy to open, with no burglar alarms to be thwarted or avoided, and no night watchmen always on the job, even though occasionally napping. Hence it is that practically every city in the country has had an unusual number of burglaries in small business establishments.

In Washington, the safe in one office has been cracked four times within two years and thieves have played several return engagements at various chain stores. In one instance, apparently finding the safe a bit difficult to negotiate they loaded it into a truck and hauled it out into the country where they could operate on it at their leisure. It is this sort of thing that has led business men to leave their doors and their safes unlocked and to advertise the fact to nocturnal visitors.

Nor is this preying on the smaller business establishments confined to safe-cracking. In many cases, the thieves are holdup artists who march boldly into stores and shops in broad daylight and at the point of a pistol demand the contents of the cash register or money drawer. They are the most dangerous kind of criminals, for they shoot at the slighest provocation, and shoot to kill. Up until a few years ago burglars and highwaymen carried revolvers primarily for purposes of intimidation and they never shot anyone unless they were cornered, and rarely even then. They did not relish the idea of facing a jury on a charge of homicide or attempted homicide. The later generations of outlaws, however, apparently have no fear of the law.

Illustrative of this recklessness was the fatal shooting of one policeman and wounding of another here a few months ago. The officers had arrested three men as suspects, believing them to be members of an organized gang that had been responsible for a large part of the crime wave here.

No Serious Charge Involved

No very serious charge could have been brought against the men and probably none whatever could have been made to stick. About the worst that could have happened to them was a few hours or days in jail. Certainly their predicament was not one that called for shooting their way to freedom: and yet that is precisely what they did. They broke away from the officers and a running duel ensued. The officer who was killed brought one of the outlaws down after he had received his fatal wound.

Chief Justice Taft, of the United States Supreme Court, regards the crime situation as so serious that recently he broke the silence in which men in his position have been shrouded and gave out an interview through Collier's Weekly in which he suggests numerous reforms in judicial procedure. Among other innovations, he favors doing away with grand juries and police court juries, and for the former he would substitute investigations by the prosecuting attorneys and informations filed as a result of such investigations.

States should assume the full responsibility of curbing crime and lawlessness, in the opinion of the former President, and each state should have a state detective service and a state constabulary. Court procedure should be so modified that judges would have greater freedom in advising juries and that appeals and the granting of new trials on technicalities be largely done away with. Mr. Taft is also against the coddling of criminals once they have ben convicted and sent to prison. A prison should mean punishment, and not a pleasant place to take a rest cure.

The situation with respect to crime in many cities is admittedly quite similar to conditions that led to the organization of the famous vigilance committees in the old wild days in California, Colorado, and other states, but it has not been suggested as yet that citizens again take the enforcement of the law into their own hands. The work of the vigilantes was short, sharp, and terrible. Thieves and murderers were hung singly and in groups of as many as six or seven, and those who escaped summary punishment did so only by fight.

The last organization of a vigilance committee was in 1891 in New Orleans when a body of citizens took from the city jail a number of Italians charged with the murder of the chief of police of that city, and with being members of the Mafia and executed them by shooting and hanging.
