SHORE ALMS HOUSE PLANNED

Plans for a consolidated almshouse and hospital for the nine counties of the Eastern Shore will be offered by Dr. Arthur P. Herring, State Mental Hygiene Commissioner, when he meets members of the various county commissioners in Easton December 5 to discuss the project.

Such an institution, Dr. Herring said, would relieve the insane hospitals of the care of merely custodial cases, thus making room in the hospitals for more persons who are insane. The crowded condition of the State hospital for the insane at Cambridge, for exampple, could be relieved, he be lieved.

As county after county on the Eastern Shore has gradually abandoned the county almshouse, sentiment for a consolidated home for the needy is said to have been growing. Recently members of the county commissions met in Easton to discuss plans for a home that would serve all the counties. Further consideration was scheduled for the meeting December 5.

Dr. Herring, who had been invited to outline his plans for a joint home by J. McKenny Willis, president of the Talbot County Board of County Commissioners, said he believed a home for one hundred immates should be constructed. He added that a hospital with thirty beds, supervised by a trained nurse, would be highly beneficial in caring for the inmates who were in need of medical attention. Dr. Herring advocated the construction of the home in the central part of the Eastern Shore, where it would be accessible to all the counties it served.

The project, he said, probably would have to wait until the next session of the Legislature. At that time, after sufficient sentiment in favor of the scheme had been shown, the counties would ask authority to issue bonds for the construction of the home.

Under Dr. Herring's plan the home would be supported by the counties, each paying according to the number of its inmates in the institution.

Last year when the above project was being considered the Commissioners of Kent County offered to give the Alms House Farm for the location of this central almshouse. This farm is valued at $10,000 and would represent that amount of money donated for the starting of the central plan.

The Kent County Chamber of Commerce have sent resolutions to Governor Ritchie and other officials, on the establishing of the central alms house in Kent county.
