SHIPPING POINT INSPECTION FOR DEL-MAR-VA. CROPS

The season of 1928 bids fair to develop an unusual interest in shipping point inspection of fruits and vegetables on the Del-Mar-Va Peninsula according to a statement just made by Dr. F. B. Bomberger, director of the Marketing Bureau of the Del-Mar-Va Eastern Shore Association.

"Growers and shippers of strawberries, early apples, cantaloupes, cucumbers and peaches are among those who have been considering the question of making use of Federal-State shipping point inspection this season," said Dr. Bomberger in discussing the matter.

"This interest among the strawberry,cantaloupe and cucumber shippers is especially not worthy; because, in the past, the bulk of these crops has been marketed without inspection. The desirability of having products inspected before shipment is becoming more and more appreciated and it would not be surprising if a large increase in the volume of produce inspected developed during the current year. Leading buyers of strawberries, cantaloupes and cucumbers in both Maryland and Delaware have expressed interest in the project and the Departments of Markets of these States are considering plans to administer the inspection service.

"This is a most healthful sign of progress," continued Dr. Bomberger, "because there can be no doubt in the mind of one who is acquainted with marketing conditions as to the practical value of shipping point inspection of fruits and vegetables.

"Well defined standard grades, properly and consistently used promote honesty and fair dealing and discourage the careless and unscrupulous packer. They enable the conscientious grower and shipper to realize a premium for care, honesty and good judgment. They provide a common, well understood language to describe quality, maturity, size and other factors that determine the value of the product. They serve as a conveninet, fair, and equitable basis for sales, for quotations to buyers, for adjustment of claims, for cooperative pooling for financing, and for reporting and comparing market prices.

"All of these advantages of standard grades are best capitalized by having products inspected before shipment by an official representative of the State and Federal governments, who will then issue certificates showing the exact grade, quality and condition of each car lot at the time of shipment. Armed with such a document the shipper is fortified and protected against rejections or demands for price adjustment on the part of the receiver in the terminal market; for the inspection certificate is prima facie evidence of the grade, quality and condition of the product at the time of inspection.

"It is very evident," said Dr. Bomberger, "that too large a volume of Del-Mar-Va fruits and vegetables moves to market uninspected. Many of our growers and shippers do not yet realize the value of the standardization which inspection inevitably promotes, nor of the high degree of satisfaction and security which accompanies the possession of Federal-State Inspection Certificates as an evidence of the grade, quality and condition of the shipments. When the extremely low cost of this in valuable service is taken into consideration, the wonder is that so many shippers have hesitated about adopting it. The increased interest in the service manifested at this time by growers and shippers is, therefore, distinctly encouraging. It looks like a decided step in the direction of adequate standardization of Del-Mar-Va products, without which they are bound to be marketed under heavy handicaps."
