Camel Living Fossil, Says Gobi Explorer

A camel is an impossible sort of creature in every way. Nothing about him is like an ordinary respectable animal. To me, writes Roy Chapman Andrews in the Saturday Evening Post, he seems to be a living fossil, a relic of the Pleistocene. Thus when he sheds his winter's wool it comes off in great strips and patches, making him look like an animated moth eaten carpet.

We found that our camels of the central Asiatic expedition shed at just about the normal rate at which we collected fossils, so when we needed packing material we simply pulled a yard or two off some camel whose wool was ready for plucking. But one must not be too careless about removing his overcoat, otherwise the beast will catch cold and die.

In spite of his size he is a very delicate animal—or thinks he is. If he has a tiny cut in one of his great flat footpads he will cry and moan like a baby. The Mongol's remedy for such an emergency is simple. The camel is thrown, his legs crossed and he is tied so tightly that he cannot move. Then a piece of leather is sewn over the cut, as one would patch a garment. It looks like a barbarous operation, but is no more painful than shoeing is to a horse.

The camel's only food is the sage-brush and thorny Gobi vegetation. He would not eat green grass if he had it. It would make him ill. The drier, the thornier and stiffer a plant is the better it agrees with him. The peculiarities of camels would fill a book.

Jealousy Does It

Paul Poiret, the Parisian dressmaker, was entertained at supper at the Blackstone after his lecture in Chicago.

"Monsieur," a Chicago woman said to him, "you are wrong in your claim that men are better dressmakers than women."

"But women prefer men dressmakers," the man dressmaker said.

"Yes, that is true."

"Yet the women are better?"

"Yes, they are."

"Well, why don't you women go to them, then?"

The Chicago woman laughed.

"Would you," she said, "ask the enemy how to win the war?"
