Ants' Fire Brigade

Who are the fire fighters of the insect world?

Tests carried out by a French woman scientist, Mme. Marguerite Combes, have proved that red ants organize themselves into fire brigades and are able to extinguish flame by the application of formic acid.

When Mme. Combes placed a lighted cigarette on an ant hill, the alarm was given immediately, and the insect firemen set about their task successfully. The experiment was repeated several times with the same result, and a lighted taper was also extinguished. Finally a lighted candle was used, and this was put out in about a minute.

When ants were in danger of burning, they were dragged to safety by their companions.

Duties of Party "Whips"

Party whips are of recent introduction into the congress of the United States. The office has long been in existence in the British parliament. The duties of whips are (1) to inform the leader of the state of party opinion, (2) to count the vote in every division and report the results to the speaker, (3) to inform members when important divisions are expected and detain them until division occurs and (4) to tell members how to vote. The government whip must also "keep a house," or quorum, when government business is transacted.

Forbidden Fun

A Chinese boy of fourteen, according to the North China Herald, was involved in an automobile accident, witnessed the death of a pedestrian during a police battle with kidnapers, and was himself kidnaped and held for two hours. He was on his way to school when all this happened and, arriving finally, he apologized to the teacher for being tardy.

Like any normal boy, he realized that under no circumstances should mere adventures and pleasure interfere with his education.
