SILAGE STIMULATES MILK FLOW

PERCY HEPBRON SAYS THE COWS TELL THE TALE

An interesting experience with silageis reported by Percy Hepbron in the Rock Hall section of Kent County.

Mr. Hepbron has used a silo for winter feeding and as a result of his experience is building another and larger silo, to insure not only adequate silage for the winter and to make it unnecessary to turn cows to pasture before the pastures are ready for grazing, but also to use in summer to supplement short pastures as a means of preventing much of the summer shrink in milk flow and to cut in half the grain bill now necessary to maintain milk flow on short pastures.

The last of the silage was fed on March 20th. It had been fed with alfalfa hay as the dry roughage. The samecows, the same grain mixture in the same amounts, fed by Mr. Hepbron himself, was continued. Alfalfa was fed all the cows could eat and would eat. What was the result? The record from the milk station was illuminating. Counting March as being a full month of silage feeding and April a full month of alfalfa feeding and other factor common to both months, Mr. Hepbron found the April production to be 1967 pounds less than for March.

When asked to explain such a difference over unlimited alfalfa, Mr. Hepbron replies" Silage is the answer. Being succulent it is our best substitute for pasture grass. The succulent feed stimulates the appetite of the cows and increases the efficiency of digestion of the other feeds. This results in cheaper and larger production both of which factors increase profits. Alfalfa is fine feed and a much cheaper source of protein than grain feeds but silage, a succulent feed which is produced in large quantity per acre, is necessary to make dairying most profitable."

As proof that succulence in the ration played an important part in the difference of production for the two months, the record for May, when the cows were turned to pasture, shows a decided increase in milk production.

Mr. Hepbron was quick to appreciate the value of the Herd Improvement Association and is an active, interested member. It will be interesting to see him apply the results to the improvement of the dairy herd.
