THE TRANSCRIPT

WHETHER THE HARD surface roads, afforded by the recent million dollar bond issue, will be finished before winter depends largely on the property owners along the proposed routes. The State Roads Commission has experienced difficulty in securing the necessary right-of-ways, and due to this difficulty, the Commission has stated that no contracts will be let until he necessary cooperation of property owners is secured. A number of contracts have been let but have been help up. In the meantime the work will be transferred to other localities. The bonds have been issued, interest is going on and it will be a serious loss to the county if residents in certain sections are compelled to travel through mud this winter when the work could have been finished.

TURKEY GROWERS MEET

The Maryland Turkey Growers Association, of Kent County, held its regular meeting in the offices of the Kent County Chamber of Commerce Thursday evening with Mrs. H. M. Baker in the chair.

The evening was taken up with discussions on the Iodine Vermicide treatment and the marketing problem.

The committee on marketing are active engaged and are cooperating with the Del-Mar-Va Eastern Shore Association in marketing the coming crop.

DEL. PEACHES FOUND SUPERIOR

O. A. NEWTON AND W. T. DERICKSON FIND NORTH CAROLINA ORCHARDS ABANDONED

WARN AGAINST INSECTS

(From the Delaware State News)

Varying reports regarding the conditions of peaches in North Carolina have been received and in order that the peach producers in Delaware might have accurate information regarding conditions in North Carolina, Senator O. A. Newton, president of the Delaware State Board of Agriculture and W. T. Derickson, of the Bureau of Markets, have just made a survey of peach conditions in the Sand Hill District of that State.

This is the most important peach producing section in North Carolina and the peach growers are in a very serious condition. Thousands of acres have been abandoned. One farm of three thousand acres was visited. It had not received any attention for three years and no effort was being made to pick or pack the fruit this year.

Many growers are still making every effort to continue in the peach business; however, the abandoned orchards which do not receive any attention are, of course, a breeding place for all kinds of diseases and insects and these pests spread to the orchards adjoining.

Conditions in the Aberdeen District are very bad and there seems to be more abandoned orchards around Aberdeen than there is around Candor. The bacteriosis seems much more prevalent on yellow fruit than on the white fruit. The growers report that they have not been able to make any money for the past three or four years and in view of this fact, it has been impossible for them to continue to take care of the orchards.

At the present time, conditions in Delaware, in so far as peaches are concerned, are vastly superior in the section visited; however, this advantage can only be maintained by exercising the greatest care in the cultivation, spraying and fertiliation of the trees.

Peach growers should keep in close touch with Dr. J. F. Adams, who is Plant Pathologist for the State Board of Agriculture, and for the University of Delaware, and also with Dr. H. L. Wozler, who is Entomologist for the University of Delaware, in order that they may take advantage of all of the improved methods for controlling the many diseases and insects for it will be remembered that two years ago a very large percentage of the peaches produced in this State were destroyed by worms, and they can very easily become a serious menace again to Delaware growers.

Conditions in the North Carolina District prove that it is impossible to stay in the peach business unless the trees are well cared for. There are many good peach growers in that State and they are producing good fruit. The good growers are, of course, picking up their early drop peaches and also exercising every precaution to take care of the insects and diseases while those who do not follow this policy are rapidly being forced out of business.
