HIDDEN TREASURE

So long as there is work to be done and the will and strength to do it, men must be choosing what master they will serve. They may prefer to pay allegiance to the past, where old standards, old beliefs, old ideals, ask their loyalty and service, or they may heed the lure of the future, where all that is new and strange and is changed lies waiting.

Men are of these two sorts: Those who look backward for security and assurance and those who will gladly give yesterday to oblivion and trust their fate and fortune to tomorrow.

Men are grown old when tomorrow loses its lure and the past begins to draw them back from dreams and desires for the unknown future. Yet he who wishes to hold on to youth need never lose it altogether, since any day that is still to come may prove richer and more fruitful than a year that is gone.

Hidden treasure lies beyond the horizon of every new day. All that a man has done and known and experienced is but a little compared to what awaits him in the treasure-chest of Time. He who keeps his courage will not be content with past rewards while the future is so rich in promise and possibility.

According to a gentleman who has been keeping tab on it, another good way to bring on a rain is to get your car washed.

If Mr. Edison can make rubber of weeds there's a profit at last for the amateur gardener.

Betterton, Md.,—An innovation has been introduced into the resort life of this Chesapeake bayside playground by Howard Turner, manager of the Casino and other popular amusement places, and Miss Nan Price who is in charge of the specialty features of the ball room. Every Tuesday morning an amatuer performance is put on by resort guests as well as visitors from the upper tier of Delmarva counties and on Thursday morning a special children's program is staged when group and solo dances are presented. Among the amateur elocutionists and dancers this week who performed were Miss Evelyn Anthony, of Still Pond, who gave an interesting declamation; Miss Vera O'Brien, of Philadelphia, who did an eccentric solo dance; little Miss Jeanne Wolf, of Baltimore, who presented an acrobatic dance act that drew several encores and the three O'Haras, of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, who gave several costume dances and speciality numbers. They range in age from four to eight and are two brothers and one sister, all talented and trained dancers. They were the hit of the morning. Many Chestertown and Kent county folk are journeying to Betterton to see the features presented twice a week. In the evening the usual prize dances for adults and German confetti carnivals are being continued.

Special programs of motion pictures are being presented nightly and the popular sports during the day are bowling and billiards for resort guests and week end parties.
