THE TRANSCRIPT

THE CHIEF TOPIC of the day is the new tariff, and the burden that is to be borne by the consumer, by forcing him to pay so much more for the necessities of life. But when we stop to consider we can see what a puzzle the tariff must be to the lawmaker. For instance: our farmers are asking for a tariff on tomatoes, in order to keep out the great number which come in from Italy. The canners who are putting up the tomatoes what the tariff lowered on tin in consequence. In the cotten states they are asking for a taric on jute, as they wish to make the bags for the bales of cotten out of the course fibres of the cotton stalk, while the manufactures of these jute bags say that such action will ruin them. The beet farmers are demanding a higher tariff on sugar, so that beet sugar will be more in demand, but the candy makers and lovers of sweets are sending in protests every day. Shoes are to be much higher owing to the duties on hides which the cattle raiser is demanding, and yet such a tariff will make the shoes he wears, cost a great deal more. Only diamonds are to be brought in duty free. As the country has no diamonds they think that in that way, they will break up the excessive smuggling. But every where there is a hue and cry and the dealers in tariff, say they must have a rest.

Petrol Tin Invaluable to Rhodesian Settler

One of the most generally used articles in the rural homes of Rhodesia is the petrol tin. Petrol and coal oil are sold in most parts of Africa in tins containing four gallons apiece. These tins are the settler's best friends, for he puts them to a hundred uses. In Rhodesia, tins are sawn asunder with a can opener, beaten flat and used as rain-proof roofs for small sheds and lean-tos. With a little manipulation a settler will make guttering, and some spouting may be made from them to carry precious rain water from roof to water tank.

With holes punched in the sides and a few blazing logs within the tin, the settler has an excellent brazier by which he may smoke his pipe and read his month-old home news on bitter July nights. He fits a tin into a loose cage of mosquito wire netting and fills the space between with charcoal which he keeps wet. Behold his dairy safe, where his butter will not turn to oil nor his jug of milk sour in the torrid November days. From a tin he makes a camp oven for the Sunday roast. In it his bread and cereals are stored from insect pests.

Destructive Fires Set by Terror-Ridden Cats

Two stories from Paris tell of two cats, each of whom burned a house down. From Montbeliard, in the east, comes the tale of a cat which, in the absence of its mistress, crawled up on the mantelpiece to reach a chunk of meat that hung above. It lost its footing and fell into the fire. Crazed with fright and pain it streaked out of the window and to its usual haunt, the granary. Its blazing fur set fire to the building, which burned to the ground. The other tale came from Lorient on the west coast. There a cat had been plagued by two small girls, who had been left at home alone. The elder of the two snatched a coal from the fireplace and put it on the cat's back. The animal rushed from the room into the adjoining bedroom and leaped into the bedclothes. When the resulting blaze was finally perceived by the girls it had grown to overwhelming proportions. The girls rushed out of the house and the building was burned down.

Good Trenchermen

Tracing the history of America's eating habits in the World's Work, Silas Bent, the writer, finds himself amazed at the gastronomic feats of our forefathers as they are recorded in the chronicles of the times.

"In the effort to show that the Pilgrim Fathers were by no means abstemious to drink, it has also been revealed that they were by no means abstemious to food," he says. "How their tables groaned—quarters of mutton and legs of beef, whole hams, several kinds of fish, corn bread and light bread, tankards of ale and quarts of wine! One is amazed that the poor fellows survived."

Phosphorescence

Occasionally the humble but useful potato, when stored in a dark cellar, becomes luminous, much to the astonishment and consternation of the observer.

Many a story of a weird specter, or ghostly visitant from another world, has had its origin in some phosphorescent display. There are many forms of more or less luminous fungus which live in woods and forests, caves and churchyards, and their mysterious bluish-green light, shining out in the hours of darkness, would doubtless fill the superstitious mind with awe and fear.

Sneezing Superstition

Ancient rabbinistic tradition asserts that from the time of Adam to Jacob sneezing was a sign of death. Jacob thought long on these things. He finally went into prayer for a repeal of the law. So successful was he in his petition that the phenomenon of sneezing ceased to be a sign of death and became an infallible sign of life. After Jacob's day, when children came into the world, they announced their arrival by sneezing. So that when the son of the Shunamite was called to life by the power of Elisha, "The child sneezed seven times and the child opened his eyes."—New York Times.

Something Omitted

Modeling in clay, now taught to children in many elementary schools, is taken very seriously by some of the young sculptors, judging from a story told by Mrs. Laura Knight, A. R. A. A friend of hers was one of a party who were inspecting the works of various pupils, and they had gathered round to look at a statuette of a little old lady which a child of five or thereabouts had just finished. "I wonder what the old lady is thinking about?" somebody said. "Oh, she can't think," replied the tiny sculptor, "I didn't make her any brains."

He Really Lived

Good King Wenceslas, who peeked out of the window at the celebration of the feast of Stephen, is usually regarded as a mythical person. He is said to have really lived, however, and the thousandth anniversary of his birth is about to be celebrated. In Polish his name was Vaclav, which somehow got transformed into the German Wenzel and so became Wenceslas. There are many other stories told about his goodness besides that of the Christmas carol.

Money Made by Indians

Included in a collection of coins put on display by a bank in New York are specimens of the only two known issues of paper money made by American Indians. One of these, a note of a bank operated by the Arapho Indians, is said to be the only known note of the only known Indian bank. The other, a dollar bill, issued by the Cherokee nation in 1862, is the only known specimen of the sole issue of money by American Indians.—Detroit News.

Bathing in Japan

An interesting commentary on the personal cleanliness which prevails in Japan is found in an apology from a native to a visitor because of what he feared would seem personal untidiness. The apology, translated, was as follows: "You see in the summer time we are too busy to bathe more than twice a day." The visitor asked: "How often do you bathe in winter?" The reply came with a typical Japanese smile. "Four or five times daily."

The Third National Bank of Chestertown, Md.
The Only National Bank in Kent County

In answer to a question asked in this space last week as to who was responsible for the distribution of the $1,000,000.00 road fund among the several banks of Kent county, not one dollar ($1.00) of which the Third National Bank received, the Board of Directors of the Third National Bank submits the following interview held by Messrs. G. Ellsworth Leary and P. Medford Brooks (members of the Board of Directors of this bank) with County Treasurer Clarence Newsome. Wednesday afternoon, July 31, at Mr. Newsome's place of business at Betterton. "Mr. Newsome, did you have the distribution of county money?" Answer. "Yes, I had a slip of paper with distribution of money. On that slip I had $100,000.00 for the Third National Bank, $100,000.00 for the Millington Bank, both at the request of Mr. S. J. Johnson, and at a meeting between myself, Scott Beck and Fred Usilton, pressure was brought to bear to cut out the Third National Bank, against my wishes." Mr. S. J. Johnson, President of the Kent County Commissioners, and a director in this bank, verifies this statement in part by saying Treasurer Newsome promised him that he would deposit $100,000.00 in the Third National Bank of Chestertown. The above speaks for itself.
