THE TRANSCRIPT

COMMUNICATED
BY SENATOR MILARD E. TYDINGS

The provision in the Tariff Bill now before the Senate which gave to the President the power to raise and lower tariff taxes was eliminated after ten days' debate by a vote of 47 to 42. Thirty-four Democrats and thirteen Republicans voted against the retention of the Presidential rate-making clause while thirty-eight Republicans and four Democrats voted to keep this power in the hands of the President.

This contest, in the opinion of many, was one of the most important in our national history. The founders of the government placed the levying of taxes in the hands of the Congress elected dirctly by the people. In 1922 this principle was changed. At that time the President was given the temporary power to increase or decrease tariff taxes within 50 per cent of the amount stated in the law. It was, in effect, taxation by Executive Order. It was contrary to the history of the Anglo-Saxon people who had struggled for centuries to keep the taxing power close to the people themselves.

President Hoover wished to retain this power in his own hands. He opposed the Congress exercising it. This is in line with his whole political training. He has been almost continually in governmental positions where he has had practically unlimited power. This was true when he was the War Food Administrator and he has always been asking for power in every position he has held. However, the placing of unlimited power in the hands of one man has never been looked upon favorably by the American people. They know that sometimes good men and sometimes bad men hold public office and while in the one case the power may be correctly used for the benefit of the people that at the same time history shows numerous instances when this power has been used to the detriment of the people. This country is not and never will be a kingdom. It is at present what Lincoln said it was: "A government of, for and by the people." There are Americans who despise this form of government, who are ready to surrender unlimited power to a President to make that President more than a king for the term of his office: but those who wish to do this do not, in my judgement, represent the bulk of the American people and the Senate in overthrowing the President's request to give him this taxing power have not only acted in line with all our past history but will be vindicated if an issue is made of it before the voters of America.

It is being pointed out by the press and by other observers that it would have been more appropriate for Mr. Hoover to have stated his position on the unjustifiable tariff rates in the tariff law, which can not help but increase the cost of living to all our citizens, instead of speaking out as he has on the sole measure which gives him additional power. As was pointed out in the debate, the President has more power than any other man on earth. He is more of a king than any king who reigns. He has the power of appointment of hundreds of thousands of officials. He is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and of the Navy, can make treaties with foreign countries, subject to the approval of the Senate, besides being the head ofthe dominant political party in the nation. A request for more power seems to be unwarranted. A frank statement which would help to obtain for those articles needing additional protection and to keep those articles not needing it from getting additional protection would better serve the nation's needs than the losing fight Mr. Hoover has just made to have the taxing power, which belongs rightly to the Congress, placed in his hands.
