Writer Would Combine Harmony and Business

Wanderers in the Home park at Hampton court are said to have been startled by hearing the gangs of workmen employed in renovating its ditches and copses break into song. How far have we strayed from Merrie England, when even highwaymen and hangmen sang at their work! We may well pine for a return to the days of Peachum and Macheath. Today errand boys whistle, grooms hiss through their teeth and taxi drivers groan, but only sailors, soldiers on the march and Welsh miners sing at their work. The rest of us confine our singing to the privacy of our baths. Behind locked doors we outsoar Chaliapin, but the presence of one fellow creature is enough to reduce us to dumbness.

It was not considered strange that the old-time milkmaid crooned at her task. Who expects the modern typist to follow her example? It is frequently complained that noise is the curse of civilization. Why not turn it into a blessing by making it harmonious? When every man sings no din of traffic will be heard. "'Tis a sure sign work goes on merrily," said Isaac Bickerstaff, "when folk sing at it." It is high time we forsook the idea that work is a penance to be performed in silence in a black coat.

Color-Blindness in Bees Proved by Investigator

Bees are said to be color blind and learn their way about by experience rather than instinct, says an investigator. It has been discovered that to the bee red and black look alike, orange and yellow look the same as green and there is no difference in the appearance of blue, violet, and purple. It has long been known that the longer bees live in a certain hive the more easily they will be able to find their way home. This has been tested by putting bees to sleep by ether and taking them to a new hive, which was then moved to a location some twelve yards away from their former home. None of them upon awakening and flying away could find their way to the new home for three days. By that time 30 per cent could find their way back. In five more days, however, 90 per cent had become so accustomed to their new location that they could go away and return to the right place.—Montreal Family Herald.

Uselessness of Worry

Worry will put more lines in a human countenance than work will ever etch. It's the most useless mental exercise we engage in; the greatest wear on our finely attuned brains. And it's downright waste of human energy.—Grit.
