INCREASE POTATO ACREAGE

More than seven thousand additional acres are being planted in potatoes on the eastern shores of Maryland and Virginia despite warnings by the United States Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Agricultural economics.

Last year there were eighty thousand acres in potatoes on the shore and an effort was made to keep the acreage at the same figures in order to assure the farmer of the same high prices which he received in the markets at that time.

Warnings in talks before potato growers on the shore last October and November pointed out the relation between prices on the Eastern Shore and prices in ten early producing states, relation in July and August shipments from competing areas, and the relation between prices and subsequent changes in potato acreage in Maryland.

Firemen were called out Tuesday morning when fire found its way through a defective chimney to the roof of a house in Twilley's lane occupied by Sam Lindsey. It was necessary to pump water to extinguish the fire. The house was owned by Mr. George McWhorter.
