When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

AN ESSAY ON GREAT EXPERIMENTS

Probably the first experiment was that made by the bride in the Garden of Eden who tried operating a culinary department without a can opener but who quickly learned, even as the brides of modern vintage do, that apple-sauce was a poor substitute for an honest-to-goodness meal. An oft repeated experiment of real magnitude is that of two lovey loves with insatiable appetites for porter house steak, fried chicken, etc., and trimmings, but with hearts that beat with a single thump, trying to live as cheap as one. An experiment of no mean proportions is that of the dollar down and dollar a week friend who, after filling his home with gimcracks by patronizing the scheme, endeavors to meet the installments and have enough left to enjoy pancakes the balance of the month without robbing the baby's bank. An interesting experiment would be to ascertain whether a flapper, young or old, would exhibit the same patience in listening to a twenty minute sermon that she displays when basking in the shadow of a permanent wave machine for three or four hours. An intriguing experiment which is being watched with much interest these days is that of simplified architecture in bathing suits. A million dollar experiment recently went blooey because a Knight of the Squared Circle endeavored to win a championship by tickling an opponent's appendix instead of swatting him on that portion of the anatomy which Sampson used to slay a lion.

Probably the hottest of all great experiments is that of trying to control, prevent, eradicate or accomplish whatever the solution of the hog cholera problem might be termed without the observation of sanitary measures to prevent the dissemination of the infection. More than a decade has elapsed since the really wonderful anti-cholera serum was introduced yet, according to the U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry, "Hog Cholera continues to be the most important and prevalent malady of swine in this country, in spite of the existance of a preventive treatment." This is simply because vaccination (the preventive treatment) has been used in lieu of, instead of in connction with, and as a supplement to, sanitation in the protection of hogs from the disease. In fact, methods of swine management, that are known to be responsible for the introduction, harboring and spread of the disease, are recommended and practiced which, in view of the howl that goes up annually over the ravages made by hog cholera, appears rather incongruous. Approximately ninety-eight per cent of the new outbreaks of hog cholera in Maryland are caused by the feeding of garbage, table scraps, kitchen swill, etc., containing bones, rinds or scraps of pork, or the water in which such meat has been washed or soaked, or to the introduction of infected hogs. It is easy to understand how the hog raisers in this State can practically eliminate danger from the disease by correcting thse two conditions. The obsrvance of such sanitary measures costs practically nothing, and there is no flareback.

Preparations are being made for an elaborate celebration of the opening of the new ferry terminal on Kent Island July 1st. The establishing of the ferry service from Kent Island to Annapolis will be a great aid to transportation to some sections of Queen Anne's and Talbot counties. The new ferry service will be operated by the Claybourn Annapolis Ferry Company.
