DRECO Ended His Troubles

Ill health forced Mr. Fred L. Anderson to stay home from work

Mr. Fred. L. Anderson

"My stomach was in a very bad shape," said Mr. Fred L. Anderson of 144 3rd St., Morgantown, W. Va. "My stomach simply refused to digest food and my appetite dwindled away until I was hardly eating a thing. In fact I felt so badly I was forced to stay home from work.

"I thank the day that I started on the Dreco treatment, for it went to the root of my troubles and now I am working every day."

He Was Not a Slow Worker

By GENEVRA COOK

BIG SVEN JOHNSON and the other men in the quarry had a lot of fun with Craig Elton—or tried to. There was something about Craig, with his squared shoulders and his fine gray eyes with their level gaze, and his willingness to laugh at a joke though it was made at his own expense, that somehow made them like him. But with all that, Big Sven and Tank and Charlie and Pete and the others in the gang regarded him as an untried "soft city fella."

Craig had never minded their sallies until today. He knew their contempt for any "collich boy." He had come up to the Mooseville quarries this summer for experience, and he was willing to stand the gaff. But it was hard today. For on this morning when they were hauled up in the big wooden topless box (the men called it "the dump") for lunch, there beside the engine house was a little red car.

And in the little red car was Rita Marsden, her black eyes sparkling as she watched the huge crane lift them slowly out of the shaft and swing "the dump" over to the ground.

Craig had seen Rita Marsden speeding around what there was of Mooseville every day since he had come up this summer. There was no way anyone who worked in the quarries, even a "collich boy," could introduce himself to this slim, high-spirited girl.

It was bad enough to have to climb out of "the dump" right before her attentive black eyes. But when Big Sven Johnson, acting upon his rights as gang boss, approached the girl, and called officiously, "Good morning, Miss. You see us come oop. We like nice gompany," Craig reddened with embarrassment. Big Sven grinned knowingly around at the men. "This is a good gang," he continued, winking at them over his shoulder. "All but one fella. Collich boy. Slow vorker. That one!" He pointed a gritty finger to the place where Craig had been—but the "collich boy" was gone.

Fifteen minutes later Craig sat miserably with his lunch on an empty flat car at the top of the inclined tracks which ran down sharply to an old shop. Beyond the shambling wooden building, now unused, save its yard, where Big Sven and some of the other workmen parked their ramshackle cars, ran an abandoned dirt road down toward Hansen's hill. The new shaft which was being sunk from the lower quarry was run right under this road. Even the workmen, hardened to risk as they were, did not dare drive across the road over the shaft, for the weight of a car would be sure to cause a cave-in.

Suddenly Craig was startled from his unhappy reflections by the sound of a motor from below. He jumped to his feet. Speeding merrily along over the road past the old shop was Rita Marsden's little red car.

A shout from behind him told Craig that the other man had seen it, too. "The shaft!" shouted Big Sven. "Cave-in! Cave-in!" Hoarse excited voices took up the cry. Already there was a flash of red beyond the shops and around the curve.

Craig threw himself on the flat car and released the brake. The car shot down the slide at a dangerous speed. Craig clinging to the sides with his hands. At the bottom Craig jumped to the ground, gathered himself up and raced toward the nearest car, the old open flivver of Big Sven Johnson. The key was there! The motor coughed and sputtered and choked—sputtered again—and was turning! The car lurched out of the yard and, gathering speed, bumped swaying down the uneven dirt road toward the hill.

Craig raced the laboring motor faster, faster. He had to catch that girl. He blew the horn madly. But the little red car did not stop. Just beyond that next curve was the shaft. . .

He was blowing the horn steadily now, but he couldn't seem to make her hear. Just as she went round the curve, he saw her turn, heard the screaming of brakes, saw the stop light flash on. . . . There was a silence.

As he made the curve he saw it in the road before him, the little red car, its front wheels just at the edge of the weak place in the road. There was a wide crack not a foot ahead. He sprang from the flivver. Crumpled over the wheel of the red car was the slim body of Rita Marsden. He climbed, cautiously, with infinite slowness and care, out on the left hand running board. The car held. He opened the door, and lifted the girl in his arms. He carried her tenderly and laid her on the soft grass at the side of the road. After a moment she opened her eyes—and smiled up at him.

At half past four, when Big Sven Johnson and his gang came up in "the dump" for the day, the rest of them watched with eager eyes Craig Elton climb, gray but happy, into the little red car (some of the men had towed it back from danger), and turn smiling to Rita Marsden.

"Vell, Sven, vot you got to say now?" called one of them.

Big Sven Johnson shook his head. "Boys," he said. "I say about that collich fella—all I said before, I take it back—" his eyes followed the red car down the road, and it was moving very slowly—"He's a fast vorker!"

Valuable "Scrap of Paper"

An apparently worthless piece of paper, torn from a page in a printed book, will be worth $10,000 if presented in probate court at Marietta, Ohio, under the terms of the will of Dr. Charles A. Gallagher. The court itself does not know who is the owner of the specified scrap of paper. According to the will the court will hold the remaining half of the torn page. When the owner of the other piece presents it, showing that the two pieces join perfectly, he will identify himself as the legatee, but he must present his claim before 1955.
