Old Rip, the Mule

By CHARLES SLOAN REID

(Copyright.)

"SOMETHIN'S got to be done," Sim Duckett was saying. "We're same thing as out o' rations; an' ain't got a cent o' money, 'cept that dollar you got for choppin' at Logan's last week."

Sim was leaning against the well box, while his wife sat on the kitchen steps, shelling a few green peas.

"I reckon, Sim," agreed Sarah, with a sigh, "but I'm wonderin' what it'll be?"

"I can't borrow another nickel on this crop, what wi' the drought an' the low price, which some say is gittin' wuss; an' we already got the mule an' every row o' this crop mortgaged. Ef I could win thet twenty-five dollars; but can't nobody enter but them as owns their own guns."

Sim sat a long while, with his head in his hands. Presently he arose and hurried to the barn lot. Inside stood an old, thin mule. Sim put the bridle on him, then backed him into a close fence corner, climbed the fence on one side, and let himself down astride of the mule.

'Back in about three hours, Sarey!" he shouted.

When Sim returned, late in the afternoon, he was afoot, and he carried a rifle over his shoulder. Sarah gasped.

"Lord, Sim; what yuh got?" she asked.

"I got this rifle off'n John Maxey—traded ol' Rip for the gun, even."

"You traded the mule for the gun, Sim?" she asked in a weak voice.

"Yeah."

"Lord, Sim; I see chain gang for you; an' what'll become o' me?"

"Yuh got to eat, ain't yuh?"

"Yeah; but—"

"Can't eat when they ain't no rations, can yuh?"

"No; of course not."

"Well, then, we got to take chances. But don't you worry—everything'll come out all right."

"How can it? Yuh got to have a mule to finish this crop! How yuh goin' to git it?"

"There'll be a mule." Sim had begun to clean the rifle.

Sim went over the gun carefully, putting it in good shape. He was a dead shot, and had no fear of the outcome.

Sim came in at dusk. Sarah had been busy with her thoughts. "Yuh can trade a mule for a gun, Sim," she began; "but yuh can't trade no gun for a mule arter the shootin'."

"Maybe I can trade back wi' Maxey."

"Hm! not much, yuh won't! I never heard o' John Maxey givin' back no bargains."

"Anyhow, we got to eat, ain't we?"

The repetition of the sentence silenced Sarah. But she did not sleep during the night. Mind pictures of Sim in stripes harassed her vision.

The prize shooting at Monk's crossroads was an event. There were three strangers present, and Sim Duckett began to entertain doubts. One of the strangers, a man named Seaborn, scored heavily in the first round. But he kept his place among the three highest in standing, until the last round. There was desperation in his movements when he took his turn for the last five shots.

Sim caressed his gun barrel with his head. "Put 'em in the bull's eye, old sister?" he coaxed.

Obediently, all five shots fell within the coveted circle. There was no longer any doubt about Sim's championship; and later, the prize money was paid over to him. He lost no time in covering the three miles home.

"Sarey, I reckon we can eat awhile longer," he declared.

"Yeah, Sim; it's good to see that money, but I ain't happy. I seem to see stripes ever which way I turn, an' they're on you."

"What'd I tell yuh 'bout crossin' them bridges?"

"But it's shore enough bridges now, Sim?"

"I dunno. What's thet I see, comin' up the road yonder?"

Sarah looked through an open window.

"Ain't thet ol' Rip comin' back, wi' John Maxey leadin' him?" asked Sim, with a peculiar chuckle in his voice.

"Does 'pear to be ol' Rip." Sarah sighed. "I reckon Maxey's found out about the mortgage."

John Maxey was a hard man, and he had an overbearing way. When he walked into Duckett's yard, leading the mule he had traded for, there was a portentous scowl on his face. "Come here, Duckett!" he shouted.

Sim went to the doorstep. "Hello, Mr. Maxey," he greeted; "won't yuh come in?"

"No. I didn't come here for no visitin.' This here mule you traded me is the out-kickin-est varmint I ever saw in my life—an' you knowed it! He's kicked every board off'n one side o' my barn. I wouldn't give a chew o' tobacco for 'im an' two more like 'im."

"All right, Mr. Maxey," said Duckett in hurt tones; "yuh can have yur gun, an' I'll take the mule back. Yuh'll alters find Sim Duckett a fair man!"

Sim brought the rifle from the house; and a moment later led old Rip back to the barn lot. When he returned to the house, there was a beam of joy on Sarah's face.

"Yuh see, Sarey?" Sim winked. "There ain't a man in this county as knows how to handle them laigs of ol' Rip's but me."

A golfing husband was entertaining a friend. They were left alone talking for some time after dinner. Then the wife entered the dining room to hear her husband pass some remark about "a hole in one."

"My goodness," she said. "Are you still talking about golf?"

"No, dear," said her husband, with a smile, "we're talking about socks."

An orator, warming to his task, took off his coat, which rather disconcerted one of the stewards of the meeting, who thought that a reporter would make a sensation out of the incident.

Towards the close, he said to the speaker:

"I don't suppose you knew when you removed your coat that a newspaper man was present?"

"Yes, I did," was the reply, "but I kept my eye on the coat all the time!"

226 VISITS BY KENT NURSES IN SEPTEMBER

Pre-School Clinics At Health Center

TEN OPERATIONS MADE

Home Nursing Class In Fairlee

226 visits were made during the month by the two nurses. This figure represents 107 separate homes which have received attention from the nursing staff of the county during September.

At the regular monthly Tuberculosis Clinic which was held at the Health Center with Dr. O'Neill in attendance, two white and three colored patients were examined. An application was made for one colored case to go to Henryton and the death of a white patient was reported. One colored patient died in August and another in September from Tuberculosis.

The pre-school clinic was held for the white children at the Health Center and for the colored at the colored High School. Dr. Mason Knox, Chief of the Bureau of Child Hygiene, examined the children and expressed his pleasure at the improved condition found among the pre-school age children of today in Kent as compared to several years ago when the work was first begun by the State as a result of the Federal aid made possible by the Sheppard Towner Act. Maryland was one of the progressive states which made an appropriation at the time so that the expiration of that Act at the end of a ten-year period would not halt the work of the State Bureau of Child Hygiene.

Ten patients were operated upon for the removal of tonsils and adenoids at the local hospital during the month and all were discharged in good condition. The hospital which has served the County well during its short life of two years has been discontinued.

One case of scarletina and one of typhoid were reported and visited. All customary precautions were taken in each case to prevent the spread of the disease.

Miss White started a class in Home Nursing with the Fairlee Girls' Club. Meetings are held every Monday and Thursday from 3:30 p. m. to 4:30 p. m. The members are much in earnest in their work and meetings are well attended.

One four year old child was committed to Rosewood, the State School for the mentally deficient. Rosewood gets splendid results and often is able to train children so that they are capable of filling a place in the world and be independent.

A second commitment was one boy, thirteen years of age, to the Maryland State Training School.

Two German children were brought from a home in Salisbury and placed with their aunt in Baltimore.

Hospitalization reported for the month included two colored patients who were sent to Easton Hospital for X-ray and a third who was admitted to the Easton Hospital for a surgical operation.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—
