THE PARTHIAN SHOT

The word had just been spoken. The rejected suitor was standing before her, listening to her elaborate explanations of her decision.

"I trust that I have made myself sufficiently plain," she said.

"Well, I would scarcely go so far," he answered, as his courage gradually returned. "It's only fair to give nature the credit for that," he added, as he retired in good order.—Calgary Herald.

Gave Life to Further Fight on Yellow Fever

In order to discover the yellow fever germ Dr. James Carroll sacrificed his own life by permitting an infected mosquito to bite him. He was a member of the board that was appointed by the United States government to investigate the acute infectious diseases then occurring on the island of Cuba. He submitted himself to inoculation, with a consequent severe attack of the fever. He recovered, but died seven years later in Washington, September 16, 1907. His death was regarded as an ultimate result of the disease. Doctor Carroll was born in England June 5, 1854, and was a physician and surgeon in the United States army at the time of his appointment to the Havana yellow fever commission.

The other members of the board were Maj. Walter Reed, also a physician and surgeon of the United States army, Dr. Jesse Lazear and Dr. Aristides Agramonte. Doctor Lazear accidentally contracted the disease during the experiments and died, and Major Reed died of appendicitis in Washington the year following the conclusion of the experiments, his death occurring on November 23, 1902.

Facts and Figures on Your Telephone

By EDWIN F. HILL

Edwin F. Hill

People will talk. Confirming this statement is the fact that telephone users served by the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Companies in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the District of Columbia made more than 1,070,000,000 calls last year, which was an increase of 26,400,000 over the number made in 1929.

More and more people are coming to realize the value of telephone service in both their business and social affairs. Almost constantly additional facilities are required. Contemplated extensions and improvements to the telephone system in this area during the year will involve gross expenditures of $16,648,000.

Company officials estimate that 33,800 telephones will be added to the system in 1931, as compared with a net gain of approximately 31,500 in 1930. On the first of the year, there were about 651,309 telephones operated by the companies in this area.

Major projects included in the program for the year which will provide employment for the companies' installation, construction and operating forces include outside plant consisting of additional pole lines, exchange and toll circuits, aerial and underground cable and conduit, and miscellaneous items, $6,491,000; telephones, private branch exchange systems and other equipment on the subscribers premises, $5,130,000; switchboard and central office equipment additions, $3,369,000, and land, buildings and additions, $1,658,000.

Gerald Found He Was Too Rich

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

"I COULDN'T marry you, Gerald," said Rose, softly.

Gerald Miner looked glum. "Who is it?"

"Nobody at all—only you're so terribly rich! Your horrible money would always be in the way."

"It can be spent, you know."

"I know, but who wants to spend money like that? You see, Gerald, if you had only fallen in love with another girl—one who really wouldn't be happy without lots of money—"

"But I didn't!" he declared hotly. "I fell in love with you—what's the matter with you? Don't you—really love me, Rose?" His voice dropped to that wooing undertone that always moved her. Then, as she made no reply, he went on: "You didn't say that you didn't love me—you just jumped at the financial side of it, and slammed hard!"

Rose blushed beautifully. "I wanted you not to have the money," she said in a strained tone, giving her secret away with every word and look. "I wanted you—us—to make it together."

"I see, my dear," he said, slowly. "But some one with good common sense has to disperse vast incomes, and all that is business, and business makes the wheels of progress go round and round, grinding out bread and butter and clothes and education and maintenance for millions of people. My father trained me to take care of money—it is a trust."

She nodded. "I understand, Gerald, only I had always dreamed—girls do, you know, of the man they will some day marry—and I had thought of the splendor of achievement—of helping a man find himself—and everything."

Gerald scrambled to his feet and sat down beside her on the rustic seat. His face was quite serious and he twirled his straw hat between strong, sun-browned fingers.

"Rose," he said deliberately, "with me, you know, there has never been any other girl but you, but you cannot possibly care two whoops about me if you let my money come between us. Some day you might meet the ideal combination, a man you can love, who is poor and ambitious. You will go far together. Darling, I wish you joy." Swiftly he bent and kissed her hand, and before she could speak he had leaped the fence and was in his car.

Gone—forever. Love had come—and gone.

Rose Wheaton looked dizzily around. The flowers in the borders all seemed to echo her thought with bending, swaying heads.

"Love has come—and—love has gone—forever."

Autumn came and Rose, a little thinner, and with soft gray eyes seeming larger than ever in her charming face, had recorded in the diary she had kept since childhood, the interesting facts surrounding two proposals of marriage which she had refused. "Jack Hilton is a dear boy, but he has the wildest ideas about making a living—says he is not a Socialist, but he talks like one—when he began to say bitter things about Gerald Miner, I just came to Gerald's defense. I told Jack that Gerry couldn't help being rich and that he was studying hard to train himself to expend it wisely. And then Peter Lattin—I told Peter I couldn't love him—ever, but that if I did care for him his poverty would not stand in the way! I wanted to tell them both that I loved Gerald in spite of his horrible fortune, but of course I could not. I know Gerry has met some other girl—"

About ten o'clock one morning the town rang with the exciting news that three bandits had robbed the Second bank and Gerald Miner had been badly wounded in trying to save some of the bank's funds.

"Mother—I must go and learn the truth about Gerald," cried Rose.

"No, dear, I will telephone your father for news. Wait until you hear."

So Rose waited, knowing that she had no right to be especially interested in Gerald Miner. She determined to tear her thoughts away from the subject.

She did not hear the gate open and close, and it was not until a shadow darkened the vine-hung veranda that she looked up and saw Gerald, tall, commanding, rather pale, with his right arm in a sling.

"Oh, my dear, I've been thinking about you!" she whispered involuntarily.

He nodded. "I fancy everybody in town's talking about me," he said wearily, then sitting down in one of the big chairs he went on: "Well, Rose, I came to tell you that they got away with a hundred thousand dollars, so I'm a poorer man than I was last summer."

"Gerald!" She hid her shamed face.

"Not very poor, dear, but one-tenth of it's gone—do you like me any better, Rose?"

"I couldn't love you any more than I did before," she began, but his good arm was around her and she told the rest in his ear.

One thing Gerald never told his wife, and it was never discovered—one of the masked men was none other than Jack Hilton.

You Little Treasure!

"Mamma," questioned five-year-old Jennie, "am I as tall as you are?"

"No, dear," was the reply. "Your head comes to my waist."

"Well," continued Jennie. "I'm just as short as you are, anyway. My feet are as far down as yours."
