DOROTHY WORDSWORTH

Dorothy Wordsworth is known chiefly as the constant companion and inspirer of her famous brother, William Wordsworth. He wrote of her. "Coleridge and my beloved sister are the two beings to whom my intellect is most indebted." She was born in Cockermouth, England in 1771, and from earliest infancy she and her brother cared for the same things and, when after his return from France where he spent several years, they decided to unite their slender capital and live together, she keeping the house for him. Later they decided to move to the Lake Country to be near their great friend, Coleridge. It was a very happy life they lived here. Southy the brother-in-law of Coleridge was also there.

As Wordsworth was essentially a poet of nature he spent much time out of doors and Dorothy was generally with him. Together they would see the "primrose by the river's brim" and the golden daffodils.

When Wordsworth and Coleridge began to do away with the artificial style of the eighteenth century they were daily and hourly accompanied by a feminine presence exquisitely attuned to sympathize with their efforts, and by an intelligence that was able to keep step with theirs.

In 1802 Wordsworth married his cousin, Mary Hutchinson, but this marriage in no way interfered with the intimacy between brother and sister.

They would take long walks and often Dorothy would come home exhausted, but she would always be ready to join him next day. She had a serious illness in 1829 and in 1836 she began to lose her memory but she continued to write and enjoy the beauties of nature.

Her principal writings are her invaluable "Journal of the Wordsworths' life at Grasmere," and the "Recollections of a Tour in Scotland."

She died in 1855, five years after the death of her brother, Edmund Goose in his biography of Wordsworth says it would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of Dorothy Wordsworths companionship to her illustrious brother. It is not merely by her biographical value of her notes that she lives. She claims an independent place in the history of English prose as one who noted in language delicately chosen, the little picturesque doings of homely country life.

HEALTH

Perhaps there is nothing more imporant to the keeping of good health than the mouth. As all the food must enter he body through the mouth it is essential that we should keep it in good condition. Of course the teeth are most important. Years ago it was thought that Riggs disease was incurable, but now they have found a preventative as well as a cure, by vigorous rubbing of the gums. The sliffer the tooth brush the better for the gums. Someone has said "If your tooth brush shows pink after cleaning the teeth get a stiffer one."

Another fine thing for the gums is a vigerous rubbing with the finger tips.

Another part of the mouth that needs rubbing very often is the tongue, to ake away he coating that some time comes, Of course this most not be too vigorous, and if the coating is thick our system needs some corrective medicine but simple remedies are best.

Restless CHILDREN

CHILDREN will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always Castoria! As harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than a more powerful medicine.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant — as often as there is need. In cases of colic, diarrhea or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. A coated tongue calls for just a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed.
