Relief Came Only With DRECO

Mr. Geo. Williams was a victim of constipation

Mr. Geo. Williams

"For four years I suffered from a sour stomach and constipation," said Mr. George A. Williams, 26 Orchard St., Cumberland, Md. to one of the Dreco Experts. My tongue was coated and I always felt tired out.

"My only relief came when I tried the Dreco treatment. Since I've taken the treatment I have almost forgotten what it is to feel badly.

"Dreco Hi-speed tablets regulated my bowels and did away with that tired worn out feeling."

Youth's Zestful Day

The zest of life does not endure forever. The days of pursuit pass and the days of reflection come, and the man who has singing through his memory what is noble and stirring, who can turn with joy and relief to those perpetual friends of his bookshelves, has laid up for himself true riches. It is a great thing for anyone that, before being plunged into the exacting work of his life, he should have had time in which to make himself familiar with some of the great things in his own history and literature, and with actings of deep minds on problems where the search is the reward.—Principal R. Bruce Taylor.

Summerless Year

The year 1816 is popularly known as "the year without a summer." Of course this term is a misnomer and is not to be taken literally. But in the northern states there were frosts in every month of the year, and similar adverse weather conditions prevailed in Great Britain, France, Spain, Italy, and other parts of Europe. Data collected by the weather bureau, however, show that the worst features of this summer were exaggerated by writers, and only a few of the less hardy crops and plants suffered from the cold during the summer of 1816.

Lost!

The minister having failed to appear at the hour for service at a church in a Highland glen, one of the elders, a sheep farmer, entered the pulpit to conduct the service.

He got through the preliminary exercises without mishap, and then gave out the text: "I am the good shepherd." Three times he repeated the words "I am the good shepherd," but could proceed no further.

"No, no, Donald, you better come doon," said a member seated in a front pew; "you're just a common sheep like one of ourselves."

Pretty Romance on Music

By JANE OSBORN

(©, 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service.)

JUANA MAPES had been taken on the staff of Smart Modes, as an associate editor and the important title she here did a good deal to make up for the fact that her salary to begin with amounted to but fifteen dollars a week. She had scrimped and scraped for four years to get her college degree, and it did seem a bit of a hardship that now she should have to take less for her services than most girls did just after leaving high school. Still she was doing the sort of work she wanted to do and she was an "associate editor."

"Of course, you won't expect to live on what you make for several years," said the editor in chief when she talked the situation over with Juana, "but what you make may at least pay your lunches and taxi fares."

"And one of the things that goes with your job," continued the editor, "is to write the musical reviews. My secretary will give you the tickets to concerts that come, and from them and the music magazines you can get together your review."

"But I'm not musical," said Juana, regretfully. "I don't know one note from another. I couldn't whistle Yankee Doodle. I—"

"All the better," said the editor with an air of having dismissed the matter. "If you were musical you might try to write high-brow reviews. All we want is the smart, smattery sort of thing."

Juana was bewildered and discouraged at the first symphony concert she attended. She studied the program carefully to see whether it would offer any explanation of the performance. She turned around to regard the expressions of the audience. Their faces were practically expressionless—they all looked about as animated as patients waiting in a dentist's office. Perhaps, thought Juana, this betokened patience, that they were waiting for something to be played that would be different. But nothing did happen—nothing that gave Juana inspiration.

She observed, however, that the young man beside her occasionally jotted something down on a small notebook. He was listening intently. Apparently, thought Juana, he was one who understood.

Two days late Juana went to another concert, occupying the same seat in the same auditorium, and to her distinct satisfaction found the same young man sitting beside her. He was, she learned, the musical critic of the Planet. She felt that if she could only get acquainted with him he might be able to help her to understand the music.

In the meantime she wrote her first review—she told in a light and readable manner of the musical outlook for the season, which she got very largely from the announcements of the press agents. And she described, in semi-humorous manner, the manners of a fashionable audience at a concert. "First rate," praised the editor as he looked over the copy. "If you knew too much about music you couldn't do that."

The third time that Juana sat beside the music critic from the Evening Planet she noticed that he looked at her as if he would like to have her recognize him. After all there was no reason why she shouldn't. At the first intermission Juana looked at him and said: "Wonderful, isn't it?"

"You mean—the music?" queried the man. "Why, yes."

That was the introduction. Juana didn't tell her neighbor that she knew who he was. But she wanted to let him know that she admired his work for she read it conscientiously every Saturday when it appeared in the Planet.

"There was a fine review last Saturday in the Planet," she said to her neighbor at the first intermission one day not long afterwards. "I read it every week."

"You do?" queried the man. "I write that stuff," he added rather dismally. "But if you want to read some really snappy musical criticism you ought to read what's been appearing in Smart Modes. That's the kind of stuff that the people want—but you can't write like that unless you have been eating and drinking music all your life. It's spontaneous."

"Well, I write that," said Juana. "I don't think it's very good, though."

Her companion stretched out a hand by way of congratulation and Juana shook it in return. On the strength of such community of interest they had tea together after the concert. Before long they were well acquainted. Then the young man—Bob Turner—asked Juana to marry him.

"But I must confess something," he said. "I don't know a blamed thing about music, really. I'm about as musical naturally as an alligator. But when they took me on as dramatic critic of the Planet they said I'd have to be the music critic, too. That was part of the job—so—"

"Then I'll marry you," said Juana. "You see I really am one of the most unmusical people in the world, naturally. We'll be lots more congenial this way.

FARMERS,

LIST YOUR

Repair Needs.

It would be hard to find a farmer what at some time or another had not lost valuable time waiting for necessary repair parts. Take this territory and total up the time lost in this way and it will astonish you. And all because repairs are not ordered as early as they should be.

There is no better time than right now—just before the busiest season on the farm—to go over your machines carefully, make a list of repairs you are likely to need and send it to us. With this list in our hands, we can order our stock so as to be prepared to met every call promptly.

Repair part service is a necessary part of our business. We realize what it means to you in time and money to get what you need at once. Help us to help you by making up your list now and sending it in to us.
