BY A WOMAN

ANNA HOWARD SHAW

Among the women who worked for the cause of women's right, Anna Shaw stood out, not as one who favored any militant action for that end but one who did all she could by using her talents and her untiring energy to that end.

She was born in England at New-Castle on —Tyne in 1847 but when she was six years old her parents moved to America and lived awhile in Massachusettes. After living there for a while her father was persuaded to go to Michegan and here the nine year old girl endured all the hardships and excitement of pioneer life in a wilderness. Her book written in 1915. "The Story of a Pioneer" is a most interesting one. When she was fifteen she began to teach school, walking eight miles a day and receiving four dollars a week. By extra work she made enough money to pay her way through College. She was gifted with an unusual voice for speaking and she lectured and preached to large interested audiences. She was impressed by the small wage of the woman compared with the man, when she did equal or harder work and she was one of the greatest helpers that Susan Anthony had in her fight for Women's right. The two would travel together, often in driving snow storms to keep engagements to speak in out of the way places. She was a statesman, possessed with measureless patience, with a great fund of humor, and dauntless courage and to her wise guidance the suffrage cause was largely brought about. Even in her conversation she was most convincing, and as some one has said; "No one could look unto those speaking eyes or see her majestic carriage without being aware that he was in the presence of an unusual human being.

When England went to war with Germany she went over and helped the wounded by her knowledge of medicine and gave her assistance in every way. When the war was over she received grateful letters from Queen Mary, of England, Madame Poincare? wife of the president of France and President Wilson, because of her untiring work and ability in the hospitals and camps. She also received a Distinguished Service Medal.

She died in 1919 at the age of seventy two years, honored and loved by all classes of people. Her statue is shown in the Capital at Washington with the other women who did most for the cause of Women suffrage.

CARE OF YOUR HEALTH

Have you taken your exercises this morning? Some one has complained of feeling stiff. Of course if one is afflicted with arthritis this must be but to a healthy person there should be no such thing as stiff. These bodies of ours need attention, and ten minutes a day saved by rising a little earlier, or in some other way will serve them in good stead if you exercise your limbs or take a brisk walk. The bridge seems to beckon us to a long walk which keeps us bright and fresh. Some people let old age creep upon them just because they feel they are too busy to take exercise but they will save much time in the long run, by being more active and quicker in their daily tasks and surely they will feel much better and brighter in every way.

In spite of women being in the lime light only one woman has even had her head on a regular United States postage stamp, and that one, Martha Washington, has twice had that honor snatched from her.

For some time the portrait of Martha adorned the four-cent stamp, but it was removed May 19 to make room for one of William Howard Taft.

Many protests from women have been received by the Postmaster-General over the removal and it is possible that the new issue of Washington bicentennial stamps may honor the demure lady of the cap and fichu.

Post office authorities do not see any chance for her reinstatement on a regular stamp issue. The bicentennial stamps will be a limited issue, as are all commemorative ones which honor some important event. Two other women have been honored by such stamps—Pocahontas and Queen Isabella of Spain.

STYLES

The new tailored ensembles gay and springlike have black chiffon broadcloth jackets with Crepe de Chine blouses.

Black gloves and shoes accompany them. The hat matches the blouse.

Watch Your Pancakes

Hats continue to rear back from the brow, with two-thirds of the hair showing. They grow smaller in size and tend toward the pancake effect of the days before the civil war. Just the same, hats for wear at the beach or in any other spot of eager sunshine grow about as large as you can manage.

Coin Dots

Watch for polka and coin dots this spring. They are one of the smartest and newest of accents for the dark frock, the white frock or the pastel frock, all of which need a bit of enlivenment to meet this gayest of many springs. Used for scarfs, for waistcoats, for blouses and ashes, they are very new and smart. And of course you know that the Roman striped scarf and sash has returned.

Goldfish is the latest skin used by Paris shoe designers for afternoon and evening slippers.

Necklaces of flat stylized roses in mother of pearl with silver centres are the latest example of the vogue for floral jewelry.

DAIRY IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION COMPLETED 2ND YEAR

The Kent County Dairy Herd Improvement Association has finished its second year of valuable work among a group of Kent's progressive farmers.

Knowledge concerning which cows are worth keeping is important at any time and especially so in times of depression. In view of the lower prices for milk and extremely low price for surplus milk, the need for fewer and better cows is very apparent. Cows that cannot produce milk at a profit are a burden to the farmer harboring them. The Dairy Improvement Association is a splendid means of measuring the feeding practices of the farmer, the production ability of his cows, and the ability of the sire to transmit producton to his daughters. Not all sires are able to transmit increased production to their daughters over that of their dams. Also under normal conditions one cow out of every three, according to a very large number of records, is not able to return a profit to her owner.

The Association begins its third year in June. It is hoped that a full membership will avail themselves of this efficient and economical means of weeding out the unprofitable cows. A complete summary of the year's work is being prepared for distribution among the members.

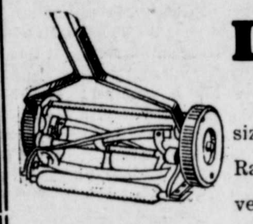

Subscription to the Transcript $1.50 per annum.
