PENINSULA TRAFFIC INCREASES

DEL-MAR-VA CHECK UP HELD THIS MONTH

An increase of 37 per cent in the number of foreign licensed automobiles checked by the Del-Mar-Va Association during the forty-eight hour period ending 5 p. m. Sunday, June 21, also showing a 95 per cent increase over the increase between 1929 and 1930 was reported at Association headquarters, Salisbury, today.

The annual check of tourist traffic has been maintained by the Association since June, 1926, and one of the interesting features pointed out in this latest check is that the increase in number this year exceeds the total of the original check in 1926. The increase this year in the actual number of cars over 1930 was 1,143 while the total check in 1926 was but 1,036. The Del-Mar-Va Association has taken annual check on the Peninsula at the same period each year. They originally selected a week end when the traffic might be considered normal so that there might be no increase because of a holiday or special event.

This year a total of 4,231 cars, all headed south and into the heart of the Peninsula was checked. Of this number Pennsylvania furnished more than half with 2,415 while NewJersey followed with 717 and New York with 476. Other States were led by Ohio with 59, Illinois 43, North Caroline 38, District of Columbia 38, Florida 32, Michigan 18, Massachusetts 11.

Others represented with from one to seven cars were Georgia, Tennessee, Texas, Wisconsin, Colorado, West Virginia, Kentucky, California, Vermont, Indiana, Utah, Wyoming, Maine, Connecticut and South Dakota.

The Association check is said to be evidence of the claim that Del-Mar-Va will experience this year an increase in foreign tourist traffic which will put several million dollars in additional new money in circulation on the Peninsula.

BOWELS need watching

Let Dr. Caldwell help whenever your child is feverish or upset; or has caught cold.

His simple prescription will make that bilious, headachy, cross boy or girl comfortable, happy, well in just a few hours. It soon restores the bowels to healthy regularity. It helps "break-up" a cold by keeping the bowels free from all that sickening mucus waste.

You have a famous doctor's word for this laxative. Dr. Caldwell's record of having attended over 3500 births without the loss of one mother or baby is believed unique in American medical history.

Get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin from your drugstore and have it ready. Then you won't have to worry when any member of your family is headachy, bilious, gassy or constipated. Syrup Pepsin is good for all ages. It sweetens the bowels; increases appetite—makes digestion more complete.

Pretty Picture Frame.

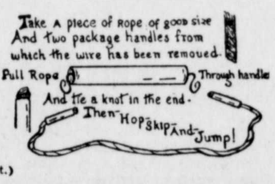

Two pieces of card-board form the back and front. An opening is cut in the front piece big enough for photograph. Front piece is covered with bits of tissue envelope lining put on crazy-patch fashion. Photograph is pasted back of opening, between the card-boards. The whole is bound with black paper.

Questions:

1. Is there really a tree called the larch?
2. Can a fly hear?
3. How many legs has a centipede?
4. Why are these little white cups on telegraph poles?
5. Does a diver have lead on his boots?
6. Can silk, made by a spider, be made into cloth?

ANSWERS:

1. Yes, indeed. It is a mountain tree and sometimes grows as high as one hundred and fifty feet. The wood is excellent for telegraph poles.
2. No. Most of the smaller insects are deaf. Many experiments have been made with all kinds of sounds but apparently the insects do not notice them.
3. Some have only fifteen pairs, some over a hundred. The number of pairs, however, is never even. Always odd like fifteen, twenty-three, ninety-nine or one hundred and one.
4. These keep the electric current from escaping down the poles into the earth. They are made of earthenware and are called insulators.
5. Yes, he does. This is so that he will be certain to sink feet down. The metal on his helmet might otherwise make him sink head first.
6. Yes, but spiders are very expensive and hard to raise. Because they eat each other up, they have to be kept in separate enclosures and besides that it is difficult to harvest the silk from the tangled web.

At the Palace of the Duke

"Then it is true, Father! On the morrow you will go to the palace of the duke at Weissenfels!" It was a slender boy of perhaps seven years who spoke with so much eagerness—a boy by the name of George Frederick Handel, who lived in the town of Halle, in Saxony, towards the end of the Seventeenth century.

The father, old and wrinkled and white of hair, clasped his hands behind his back and, with unsmiling eyes, gazed downward at his son. Yes, it is true," he said. "Why are you so excited?"

"Because I, too, wish to go to Weissenfels. Oh, Father, please, may I accompany you on the journey?"

"Why?" The word came sharply.

George shifted his feet uneasily. His gaze strayed about the dark room in which they were standing, then fixed itself on his father's face. "At court," he replied boldly, "there is music—oh, such beautiful music. I love to hear it!"

The father's hands tightened behind his back, and a look of anger hardened his face. He had no use for music, no sympathy for anyone who cared for it—least of all for his young son.

"Hark to me!" he burst forth in an angry voice. "Much pain it gives me to hear you prate ever of music. Music? Bah! A waste of time! A lawyer you shall become, not a wandering, penniless musician! It is my wish for you. I have spoken!"

George's lips quivered. "But may I not go to the court with you?" he insisted. "Surely, there can be no harm—"

"No!" The father brought his hands together with a sound that echoed in the silent room. "No!" he repeated. "I will not have it!"

His father, old Herr Handel, set forth early the next day in the post chaise. George bade him good-by; but a few minutes after the carriage had passed through the gate he started after it. The roads were bad, the vehicle slow-moving. He felt sure that he could overtake it. Then he would plead with his father once more—and perhaps his father would yield.

George came up with the carriage at a considerable distance from the town. Fortunately for him, it had become bogged in a soft spot on the road. He saw it as he was emerging from a wood—one wheel well down in the mud, the driver with his shoulder against the spokes, and Herr Handel tugging at the bridles of the horses.

"What!" cried the father in amazement, catching sight of his son. "You here? Tell me, what is the meaning of this?"

"Oh, Father!" the boy replied with tears in his eyes. "Take me with you! Please—only take me with you!"

"And it is for that you followed the post chaise!" The old man bit his lips in anger. "You came all this distance after I had told you—"

Suddenly his face softened. In his own strange way he loved his son—and now the boy looked so tired, so forlorn, so miserable, with his clothes flecked with mud and the tears running down his pale cheeks! Herr Handel lacked the heart to send him back.

During the next few days George found keen delight in wandering about, and especially in listening to the organ in the duke's chapel. The organist took an interest in him and permitted him now and then to sit at the instrument. The boy's remarkable skill astonished and pleased the man.

One Sunday morning he allowed George to play a voluntary at the end of the service. The duke was in the chapel that morning. The beautiful sounds that the boy drew from the organ thrilled and amazed him; and after the service he sent for George and his father.

While they stood before him, he said to Herr Handel: "It is a remarkable son you have here! I have heard him play. His playing is cultured. He has abnormal gifts! He must be trained."

The father moistened his lips. "But, your highness," he replied nervously, "it is a lawyer I would have my son become—"

"A lawyer?" repeated the duke severely. "Bah! I tell you the boy has remarkable gifts."

The duke drew a quantity of coins from his pocket and placed them in George's hand. "Your father must provide a competent teacher for you," he said in a tone of command.

George could hardly speak, so great was his joy. He was to have a teacher! He was to follow his beloved music!

If There Were No Copper

Copper, most ancient metal known to man, is indispensable to electricity, newest handmaiden of the race.

Your telephone would be dead, your car would be useless, your radio silent; there would be no electric lights without copper.

Copper is the yardstick that determines the degree of any country's electrification.

Ironically, Africa, now discovered to have the richest copper deposits in the world, is the Dark continent. It hardly uses any copper at all.

Holiday Spirit

During frosty weather a baby car got into a dreadful skid, shot across the road, and turned a complete somersault, imprisoning its two passengers. A woman who had witnessed the affair ran to the spot and called out agitatedly: "Is anyone hurt?"

"Oh, no," came a voice from the interior. "This is nothing to us. We are airmen."

Lessening Sadness
Is the First Duty of the Funeral Director

My excellent system of arranging the details for each and every funeral entrusted to my care leaves with those upon whom I wait, a feeling of confidence and satisfaction that the last offices were performed with such perfect harmony as to greatly lessen the sadness connected with such an event.
