When BABIES are Upset

BABY ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready?

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. It's gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. It's mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria.

Let's Make Some Gifts

This will be a fine present for mother, for it will keep all her sewing things clean and ready for use.

Take a cigar box or any small wooden box with a cover. Use a wet cloth to rub off any paper that is on the box. Then stain or paint the box a pretty green or some color which is not too light. Make little places for spools, thimble, pins, buttons and other small things by putting thin strips of wood across the inside of the box to form small squares. You can nail the wood in with tiny brads. If you cannot get thin pieces from some old cover or box, use heavy pasteboard and fit it tightly into place. Perhaps as a little decoration you can paint mother's initials in gold or any bright color on the cover.

A Sewing Box and a Door Stop.

This will be useful for Dad to have, either at home or in his office. Use two blocks of wood. One block must be shaped like a wedge so it will slip under the door and hold it back. Nail the other block to one end of this so it is standing upright. If you use a jig saw you can cut this upright block into a fancy shape by rounding the corners or doing a bit of carving. Paint both blocks a pretty color.

BETTY—"Jane, dear, who was the fairy Godmother to give you all this beautiful silver?"

JANE—"Do you really like it so much? It was Jack's surprise on our anniversary — the Fairfax pattern in Gorham Sterling and, let me whisper the price — only $205.00 for 76 pieces! Isn't it almost unbelievable?"

BETTY—"But, Jane, who carries Gorham patterns in town?"

JANE—"Why, my dear, you may see any of their patterns at

Finally Won Her Choice

By JOHN JONES

(©, 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service.)

IT IS not very pleasant to be the only girl in your crowd that isn't married or engaged. Marion Gray sometimes felt philosophical about the matter when she looked about her and saw the sort of husbands, present or prospective, which her friends had chosen. She herself could have had Jack Rogers any day if she had not preferred to wait for a taller, handsomer, richer man. But more often she felt lonely and out of things, and wished the Prince Charming she yearned for would put in an appearance.

It isn't to be wondered at that Marion read with great interest the following item in the Brainerd Daily Sun:

"We hear that the new building on the corner of Main and Winter streets has been leased to the firm of Caldwell & Scobie, rising young architects, who will live, we understand, at Mrs. Weatherby's boarding house."

Now only single young men boarded at Mrs. Weatherby's, so it seemed a foregone conclusion that there were two young bachelors coming to town. And as Mrs. Weatherby lived across the street, Marion could not help but see them occasionally.

She saw them—from a distance—the very night they arrived. Both were presentable enough, but young Caldwell seemed to be the better looking. He walked with an air and his clothes were the last word in cut, crease and color.

In the days which followed, the small town of Brainerd fairly laid itself out to please the newcomers. They got considerable business and a great deal of entertainment. There were even those who said it was ridiculous the way people fell all over two ordinary fellows just because they came from the nearby city.

"Personally," said Jack Rogers one evening to Marion as they sat on the upper veranda step watching the moon rise—or at least Jack thought that was why they were sitting there, "I'm suspicious of people who come from goodness knows where. For all we know, they may be a couple of crooks!"

Marion almost choked with indignation. "You're just too absurd, Jack!" she cried.

"Especially that Caldwell guy," grumbled Jack. "Isn't he the mamma's boy! And there he is now, swinging his cane! And, by gosh, I do believe he's coming here!"

If Jack could only have known how big a favor his departure would have been to Marion, he would not have known whether to please her by going or punish her by staying.

As it was, he withdrew into a shell of reserve and heard Marion putting herself out to be agreeable to a stranger as she had never exerted herself to be agreeable to him.

And while he watched and listened he evolved a scheme whereby, if Caldwell & Scobie were crooks, the fact should be unocovered. Nor is it going too far to say that he devoutly hoped they would indeed prove to be real crooks.

Before young Caldwell was even thinking of going home, Jack had risen and bade both of them a cool good night.

On the following morning Marion heard from various sources that Jack had left town, although he seemed to have told no one where he was going. For the first time in her life Marion's thoughts concerned themselves with his whereabouts.

A week passed and he did not return. During his absence Marion was frequently seen with Caldwell and her crowd got considerable kick out of wondering if he was really in love with her.

Marion herself wondered, too. Strangely, Jack with his mysterious absence had done more to advance his interests than he ever had with his presence. There were actually moments when Marion found herself weighing the two men and thinking that the scales tipped very little one way or the other.

Two weeks later, Jack returned, as quietly as he had gone away.

He went straight to Marion. And had he not felt so miserable himself he might have noticed that she looked—well, different, somehow.

As it was, he sank down in the couch hammock beside her and waited a moment, as if wondering just how to put what he was about to say.

Then, "I suppose I might as well get it off my chest," he began. "I've been tracing this Caldwell & Scobie firm from one town to another. They've certainly been around a lot. But I had no luck. That is—well, you see, if you were going to marry young Caldwell, I wanted to make sure beforehand he was all straight and would make you happy. And I guess he is. Couldn't find a thing about either of them that wasn't O. K. So, if you love him, that's all there is to it."

Marion folded her slender hands about her knees. "That was kind of you, Jack," she said with a smile. "But you needn't have bothered. Mr Caldwell told me last night he's engaged to Doris Scobie, his partner's sister."

Jack sighed with tremendous relief. "Thank heaven," he said. "Then we're just where we were before."

"Are we?" asked Marion, with a laugh. "Oh Jack, you old faithful, ask me to marry you just once more!"

FURROWS

There ain't been much said lately about "Republican Prosperity." Of course, a feller here and there has tried to point out that this is a world depression, so the Republican Party can't be blamed fer it. But land sakes! Wasn't the depression of the early nineties a world depression? But that didn't make no difference to the Republicans back in them days. No sir, it wuz preached from housetop to hovel that the Democrats wuz to blame fer that depression. The politicians fergot all about 1873 and what party wuz in the saddle then. If anybody mentioned that depression the Republicans blamed that on the Civil War.

Well, the Civil War wuz to blame fer part of it, but unless I read my history wrong, the Republicans wuz to blame fer the major part of it. And they wuzn't satisfied with blamin the '93 panic on the Democrats, they been a harpin on it ever since. They fergot all about that 1907 upset under Mr. Roosevelt and a Republican Congress. It's easy fer some people to fergit what they don't want to remember. Some of the Republican politicians even tried to lay the blame fer the 1921 depression on Mr. Willson and the Democrats. They never thought about layin the blame fer that one on the World War.

Well, gentlemen, the Republicans can't saddle this depression onto the Democrats. I certainly wuz afeared Al Smith would git elected in 1928 and then the Democrats would git the blame fer the depression. Oh, I didn't know fer certain that we would have a depression at that time, but things in general pointed that way, and I, fer one, wanted the blame to rest where it belonged. There ain't no doubt in my mind about who is to blame fer this present depression. It didn't jest happen along at this time. Of course, it wuz due to the political and economic policy of this Gov'ment that has brought about this state of affairs, and this Gov'ment has been Republican a major portion of the time since 1860. The Republican Party has always stood fer higher and higher tariffs, and the last tariff wuz the straw that broke the camel's back.. Trade can't go one way all the time, and when the countries of Europe had to turn all their spare cash towards payin war debts they couldn't buy our goods, and they couldn't sell enough over here to git any money to buy anything from us. And who made them countries put up cash on their war debts? Why, it wuz the Republican Party! Why, Mr. Coolidge would have given up some of his fam'ly ruther than let this country take payment fer war debts in goods. No sir, it had to be gold or nothin. And, gentlemen, it looks now like it's goin to be nothin.

Well, I can't see it no other way than that the Republicans is responsible and to blame fer this depression, and I'm fer puttin the blame right where it belongs. Uncle Jed don't agree with me on this matter. He's been a readin a lot of these business journals and tney all lay the blame on this here business cycle. They have got a lot of figgers to show that these depressions are periodic and can't be helped. These fellers that teach and write economics have got to the place where they think these business cycles are a part of nature jest like the seasons of the year. They are like a dog with fleas, they are so used to havin 'em that they think they must have 'em. Jed don't pay much attention to politics. He sez these depressions come accordin to economic laws. But I sez to Jed the other day, if these depressions come accordin to economic laws them laws is passed by the Republican Party.

Well, the Democrats has got a good chance to rub it in right hard on the Republicans about this Republican prosperity business, and I, fer one, am in favor of taking the most of the opportunity while we've got it. My slogan is goin to be: Vote fer the full dinner pail, but you won't git it by votin the Republican ticket.

CHILDREN CRY FOR IT—

CHILDREN hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and just as harmless as the recipe reads.

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria have him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, you should use it to keep the system from clogging.

Castoria is sold in every drug store; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.
