Lessening Sadness

Is the First Duty of the Funeral Director

My excellent system of arranging the details for each and every funeral entrusted to my care leaves with those upon whom I wait, a feeling of confidence and satisfaction that the last offices were performed with such perfect harmony as to greatly lessen the sadness connected with such an event.

All Sorts of Virtues Credited to Turquoise

To the people of Tibet and Persia, the turquoise appears in the light of a charm—a talisman endowed with curative powers and mystic benefits, writes Bayard Nettleton in the Los Angeles Sunday Times. It was considered "an astringent and sweet to the taste, an excellent means of provoking the appetite. Every poison, whether vegetable or mineral, or a mixture of both, was rapidly neutralized by the turquoise. It relieved the pain caused by demoniacal and other obnoxious influences. The stone was employed as an eye remedy and applied against the stings of the scorpion. It was used in temple worship and as an omen of good luck in the marriage ceremony."

For centuries the turquoise has been linked with the spiritual and physical welfare of the ancient nations. Derived from Tibet and Persia, these superstitions or beliefs were carried through conquest and trade to all the countries of the East, finding a ready following in India, China and among the more cultured peoples. Later, the ideas invaded Europe and it is held by many that much of the American Indian turquoise lore had its inception from these same beliefs.

Vivid Pen Portrait of Old English Gentleman

"I notice that this gentleman is dressed in more easy fashion than some," Dion Clayton Calthrop wrote in "English Costume" in describing an Eighteenth-century Englishman. "His coat is not buttoned, the flaps of his waistcoat are not over big, his breeches are easy, his tie is loose. . . . I know that he has a tremendous periwig at home covered with scented powder; I know that he has an elegant suit with fullness of the skirts, at his sides gathered up to a button of silver gilt; there is plenty of lace on this coat, and deep bands of it on the cuffs. He has also, I am certain, a cane with an amber head very curiously clouded, and this cane he hangs on to his fifth button by a blue silk ribbon. This cane is never used except to lift it up at a coachman, hold it over the head of a drawer, or point of the circumstances of a story. Also, he has a single eyeglass, or perspective, which he will advance to his eye to gaze at a toast or an orange wench."

Six Towns in One

There are six towns in one in Staffordshire, England. They are Stoke-upon-Trent, Hanley, Burslem, Longton, Tunstall, and Fenton, and they are now known under the name of Stoke-on-Tren, with a single head in the lord mayor, who is really five mayors in one with the use of five mayoral chains which are the badge of office, one for each town. There are also six town halls in the federation, but the police administration is centered in one chief constable. And there are six public libraries which were separate municipal undertakings, and there are five markets, which are now under one control. The towns are largely given over to the pottery industry of which there are more than 300. Foremost among them is that of Josiah Wedgwood whose bicentenary has been celebrated recently.

Modern "Dear Old Ladies"

They came down the garden path as summer rain comes on the thirsty ground, kindly and softly, these two old ladies in their dark clothes. Peace walked in their footsteps. Their gait was like the laying-on of healing hands, their steps fell on the earth like a benediction. Strife and weariness never lived with them, one felt. Sure they had quiet in them, more wisdom than the great, else they never walked so freely down the garden path. They talked, as they came to the garden gate. Quietly they talked, with animated quiet faces. The sad passer-by heard them open the gate, and heard the taller lady say, their peaceful talk ended: "But, oh, my dear, if I were you, I'd hedge on Bumpur Tin, and sell my copper short."—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Fortune From Simple Idea

Among inventors of domestic utilities, a high place must be given to an unknown old lady of Durham, England, whose notion of grinding mustard seeds and sifting the powder through cloth led to Mr. Jeremiah Colman making a tremendous fortune and founding a worldwide business. The old lady was enterprising enough to forward a sample of her preparation to King George I, who was delighted at the new form of a condiment which previously had to be prepared by a clumsy and lengthy process, and his favor instantly established its success.

World's Great Debt to Copper and Electricity

The Siamese twins of science as though conscious of their interdependence upon one another, marched on the world hand in hand. For instance, Capt. Jonathan Carver caught sight of the famous "Ontanagan boulder," a nugget of pure copper weighing six tons, in 1765; Alexander Henry, a visionary Englishman, tried in vain to remove it and to mine in Ontanagon county during the three years from 1771 to 1774, Russel Gore writes in the Detroit News. In 1786 Luigi Galvani—whose name is embalmed in the amber of our language in the word "galvanic"—discovered that electricity applied to the dismembered legs of frogs convulsed them with the appearance of life. In fact, he thought he had discovered the life force—the elan vital of the French—the energy that animates alike the unicellular activities of the amoeba or the complicated mental processes of a Dante or a Voltaire.

Alexander Volta, professor of physics at the University of Pavia, wrote the magic word, "volt" into the language of electricity, by carrying the Galvani experiments to the climax known to electrical historians as the Voltaic Pile. In the year in which Doctor Houghton was born, 1809, the great English scientist, Sir Humphry Davy, foreshadowed the age of electric light when he exhibited a voltaic arc based on the discovery of Professor Volta.

Influenza Plague Once Held Fashionable Cold

The word "influenza" came into vogue in English-speaking countries in 1890. The disease had been epidemic in St. Petersburg in 1889, and it spread over Europe and to England and the United States. In the following spring it was severe in India and Australia. In most of these countries it was known as "l'influenza," or "influenza," though in Paris "la grippe," a term used in the middle of the last century, was revived. The word "influenza" was given in Italy toward the middle of the Eighteenth century to an epidemic of febrile catarrh. It was in use in England as early as 1762. In that year Mrs. Montague, the "blue stocking," wrote: "Mr. Montague . . . returned to London quite well, though he has been much pulled down by the fashionable cold called l'influenza." A general epidemic of influenza took place toward the close of the World war, passing over western countries in three waves, the first appearing very suddenly in May and June, 1918, the second in September and October, declining in December and the third in March, 1919. Its origin was attributed by France to Spain, whence came its most frequently used designation of "Spanish influenza." Spain, in turn, attributed the outbreak to France, and this continent thought it started in eastern Europe. Virtually all the western nations were heavy sufferers. It was most virulent in the second wave.—Montreal Family Herald.

Films Helped Police in Round-Up of Criminals

Since the films are still from time to time blamed for demoralizing the youth and thereby encouraging crime, it seems only fair that wide publicity should be given to a case where they have proved of important assistance to the police. Reuter reports that a Berlin producer wishing to lend an air of verisimilitude to a scene of low life, hired a number of citizens of the Berlin underworld to "walk on" in the course of the production. The police got to hear of this, and also decided to call round at the studio and walk on, with the result that they presently walked off with several "wanted" men whom they found among the crowd of undeniably sinister supers.

This seems a great tribute to the "realism" of the production; if the crooks were good enough for the police to arrest on sight they may truly have been said to carry conviction in their faces.—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Educational Problems

The woman who is determined to give her three-year-old daughter a proper foundation occasionally gets an unexpected setback. When she heard the child say "Pota-ter" she took the child to task. "No, no," said the dutiful mother, "not 'pota-ter,' but 'p-o-t-a-t-o.'" The little girl nodded. "And not 'toma-ter,' but 't-o-m-a-t-o," added the conscientious mother. Again the little girl nodded. She understood. An hour later she rushed into the house.

"Guess what I'm eatin', mother."

"I give up," replied her mother.

"Banan-o," exclaimed the girl triumphantly.

Having laboriously cleared up this rather perplexing situation, mother pointed out to her daughter that to say "runnin'" and "swimmin'" and "walkin'" was just all wrong. She felt quite pleased at the child's aptitude, but was rather discouraged when her daughter told a neighbor that her doll's chair was "broking."—New York Sun.

There's Power Aplenty in the McCormick-Deering 10-20

THE McCormick-Deering 10-20 Tractor provides power in abundance for general farm work. It pulls two plows under all reasonable conditions and travels at good speed while plowing deep. For its size, the 10-20 has a great capacity for work—you can apply its power three ways—by drawbar, belt, or power take-off—to operate a variety of equipment throughout the year.

The surprising strength of the 10-20 is due to the rigid one-piece main frame, in and on which are mounted the 4-cylinder engine, clutch, and transmission and differential assemblies. All important wearing parts are completely enclosed, protected from dust and grit, and run in a bath of oil. Handholes provide quick accessibility to all enclosed parts.

Ask us how this remarkable, sturdy, powerful tractor can make power farming a reality on the moderate-size farm. We also have the economical McCormick-Deering 15-30 and the all-purpose Farmall.
