TONGS UP FALSE TEETH

TONGER BRINGS UP BIVALVE SPORTING THE STORE UPPERS HE LOST LAST YEAR

There was considerable excitement aboard an oyster boat off Hail's Point, Queenstown creek, near the mouth of the Chester river the other day, when an oyster wearing a perfect upper set of false teeth?

Was there excitement?

Hail's Point!

There was excitement not only because the oyster was wearing false teeth, but because the false teeth that the oyster was wearing didn't belong to the oyster at all. They belonged to the oyster tonger. He had lost them a year ago.

When a man meets up with his long-lost store teeth, brazenly worn by another person, he is mighty apt to call for a show down right then and there—to demand, without mincing any words:

"Gimme them teeth, you"—

But in this case the tonger had acquired another set of uppers in the meanwhile, so he had no immediate use for the set that the oyster was wearing.

State Conservation Commissioner Swepson Earle, to whom the incident has been reported, today began an investigation to learn what disposition had been made of the teeth, and what claim, if any, will be entered by their original owner to recover them.

It seems that just about a year ago this time the tonger was tonging for oysters off Hail's Point when he accidently opened his mouth and lost his teeth overboard.

Everybody who heard about it said:

"Well, you'll never see those teeth again."

And the tonger, because he believed what people said and knew he couldn't get along without a set of uppers, bought a new set.

In the meantime a baby oyster, possibly disconsolate over the thought that the facts of life forbade its ever cutting any natural teeth, happened upon the lost uppers and joyfully appropriaed them.

This was entirely normal, according to Commissioner Earle, who explained that young, unattached oysters have a weakness for taking up with anything solid with which they may come in contact on an oyster bar.

But while the oyster was enjoying the distinction of being the only known mollusk in the world with false teeth, the tonger who had lost the teeth returned to the Hail's Point bar, started to tong again for oysters and tonged his teeth.

(The above acticle recalls a similar instance that occurred over 30 years ago, when Mr. John Tilghman, of Kent Island, lost a set of his false teeth while oystering on Swan Point, which were caught by an oysterman some months later, an account of which was publish in the Transcript. Mr. Tilghman read the article, went to Rock Hall and got his teeth.)

PASTORS ATTEND SUMMER SCHOOL

COLLEGE PARK.—Pastors from many sections of the State registered Monday at the University of Maryland, at the opening of the summer school for ministers, which will continue through Saturday. The school is held under the joint auspices of the university and Washington College, Chestertown.

The purpose is "to study in a serious way the problems of life in rural and metropolitan areas and in particular the problems of every church and pastor endeavoring to administer an effective program for these areas in this confused age."

The session this year grew out of a suggestion by President Raymond A. Pearson to join the resources and experience of the university and Washington College schools. Next year's sessions will be held at Chestertown. A certificate will be awarded to those who complete a three-year cycle.

Dr. Paul E. Titsworth, president of Washington College, is dean of the faculty. Every evening will be devoted to inspirational lectures by widely known speakers. During the day lectures that are a part of the course of study are on the program.

The instructors are: Dr. Arthur E. Bennett, of the Adult Education Bureau of Iowa; Dr. Harold F. Cotterman, University of Maryland; Dr. Mark A. Dawber, superintendent of rural work of the Methodist Episcopal Board of Missions; Dr. George H. Preston, State Commissioner of Mental Hygiene of Maryland; Dr. Samuel H. De Vault, University of Maryland, and Dr. William Burdick, director of the Maryland Playground Athletic League.

Subscription to the Transcript $1.50 per annum.
