ANNE HATHAWAY

The erection of that classical building in Washington, D. C., for the purpose of keeping all things connected with Shakespeare ever before the minds of the people has caused many persons to delve through dusty files, and struggle though the old legal meanings to find new things connected with the great poet. But there is one thing that is proved, that he married Anne Hathaway, whose rose covered home is shown to every one who goes to the little town on the Avon.

In regard to this fair lady who capturned the famous poet's heart, we have to rely very largely on tradition.

That she was older than the poet is known for at the time of their marriage she was twenty five while he was scarcely twenty.

Her house is a very short distance from the house of Shakespeare's father and we can see in fancy the poet going "across the fields to Anne."

Tradition tells that she was a pretty fair haired lady and that for some time she resisted the ardent wooing of her lover, but when he committed the crime of poaching on Sir Thomas Lucy's preserves and was threatened with prison, she showed that her youthful lover had really won her heart. Her one idea was to get him away from Stratford, and when Sir Thomas, in going through his estate, found a poem ridiculing him, he at once laid it to Shakespeare's door and ordered him put in prison at once. There were some strolling actors stopping in the village, and Ann was asked to come down and help the inn keeper's wife wait on the table. It is said that they were struck with her beauty and she, seeing the impression which she had made, asked them as a favor to take Shakespeare to London with them. This they were willing to do so the next thing was to persuade him to go away. He was unwilling to go at first as he was rather enjoying making Sir Thomas uncomfortable and he did not wish to leave his sweetheart, but she promised to marry him before he went and with this he consented to go. And so the marriage was performed in the little church at Stratford, and then the young husband left his wife to go to London with the actors.

It was a sorry bride that he left behind, and very little did Ann see of hm afterwards as he became a great actor and then a playwright, so all his time was taken up with his work and he had little leisure to go back to his native town. At his occasional visits we are sure that Anne was very happy and that she was proud of him who had become famous and was invited to play before the great Queen.

This story of course is only tradition largely mixed with romance but we know that when the poet died he left in his will his best bed to his wife. The possession of a comfortable bed in those days of hardly any manufactures meant a great deal. And so the gentle womn lived on in her little cottage, one who would have been never known to prosterty, except that she was the wife of a great man.

Richard Burton has writen a sweet little poem about this romance, called "Across the Fields to Anne."

"How often in the summer tide
His graver business set aside,
Has stripling Will, the thoughtful eyed,
As to the pipe of Pan,
Stepped blithesomely with love's's pride
Across the fields to Anne."

LA MODE

You can't tell where she s likely to come from, this chic woman. She may come from a small apartment in New York, or from the wide out west and she may rush down town to her job. She may wake up, at noon, blinded by a strong stream of sun that pours through her roof window in a studio on Washington Square. And she may be the dynamo around which the brisk aliveness of a penthouse vibrates.

She is not made in any pattern. She does what she likes and does it at the time that best suits her temperament. She may be a demon and she may be a saint—or a combinaton of both. She may be 20 and she may be 50. She may plug away at a job and, after every week, take home a bare $40 at which she grinningly turns up her nose but one which she has an awful lot of fun; and she may have a husband who has never been able to keep track of just how much money he has because he can't count that high and so she counts the cost of nothing.

Another Empress

With all this hurrah about Empress Eugene, wasn't nice of some one to think of that other glamorous Empress, Josephine? So now we have charming little ornaments for the ears, the throat or the arm, christened after the consort of the first Napoleon.

They are lovely cameos, set in sterling silver and marcasite, and it is really remarkable to find them priced for the small sum of $1 each. The cameos themselves are of a pinkish tint, beautifully fashioned. They come from Italy.

And camoes, you know, are ultra smart just now, being another of the revivals of an old-time regime. The earings are of the "dangling" type and come in two sizes. There is a pendant on a slender chain and a bracelet with a shaped cameo and links.

A Very New Hand Bag

Just when we thought every possible idea in handbags had been exhausted comes a stunning new idea for fall. It is the exclusive design of a smart Fifth avenue shop, but there seem to be possibiities that it might be copied at home.

The bag itself is a largish envelope model of suede, beautifully fashioned. Its feature of distinction is the band of fur which runs across it through the center, crosswise. It is a band about three inches wide and may be of any fat fur you prefer.

But it must, of course, match or at least harmonize with the furs with which it is carried. The bags on display use tawny leopard on brown suede and baby caracul or gray astrakhn on black.

RECIPES

Cream Sponge Cake

3 eggs.
1 cup sugar.
1 cup flour.
1 teaspoon baking powder.
Salt.
1-4 cup cold water.

Bake the sponge cake in an oblong pan, and when cool slice into three layers with a long sharp knife. Put layers together with the flavored whipped cream. Frost top and sides with a thin coating of frosting. Press nuts around sides and garnish top.

Whipped Cream Filling.

1 cup cream.
1-4 cup powdered sugar.
1-2 teaspoon vanilla flavoring.
1-4 teaspoon lemon flavoring.
1-2 cup sliced nuts (hazelnuts or almonds).

Potato Souffle

3 cups mashed potatoes.
3 tablespoons butter.
2 tablespoons hot cream.
3 egg whites.
Salt.
Pepper.
1-2 cup buttered fine crumbs.

Add to the hot mashed potatoes the butter and cream. Fold in beaten egg whites and put in flat greased baking dish. Sprinkle lightly with buttered crumbs and bake in a hot oven (450 degrees F.) about ten minutes, until crumbs are brown.

Chocolate

1 1-2 squares chocolate.
1 cup cold water.
1-4 cup sugar.
3 cups milk.
Salt.

Cut the chocolate into pieces, add the salt and water. Stir constantly over the direct heat until smooth, and let boil two minutes. Add the milk and sugar, heat until foamy, beat with an egg beater to prevent the scum forming, and serve at once. If for any reason the beverage must stand, place over hot water, but do not let the water boil.

Restless CHILDREN

CHILDREN will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always Castoria! As harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than a more powerful medicine.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant — as often as there is need. In cases of colic, diarrhea or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. A coated tongue calls for just a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed.
