HELOISE AND ABELARD

Abelard was a profound student of philosophy, and the most eminent thinker of his day. Accused of holding too independent ideas by his church he fled into the wilderness to escape persecution, but was followed by crowds of students who were eager to hear his lectures.

Heloise who was born about 1100 was a very beautiful maiden, and she was so ambitious to learn that her uncle, the Canon Fulbert placed her as a pupil with Abelard who was a priest and at least forty years old, while Heloise was only eighteen. She was then remarkable for knowledge for she knew Latin, Greek and Hebrew and was very proficient in her own language, French. Abelard, though a priest fell violently in love with her, and she returned his love. Then they ran away together her uncle was furious and Abelard, insisted upon marrying her, but she refused for a long time for fear that it might injure Abelard's advancement in the church. She appealed to him not to sacrifice for her the independence of his life and when they were finally married she insisted upon keeping it a secret. When her uncle Fulbert published the fact abroad she denied it, and life was made so unbearable that she took refuge in a convent. Her uncle so infuriated against Abelard planned a dreadful revenge.

He and some others broke into his Chamber one night and multilated him so badly, that he was cast from his pennacle of greatness into an abyss of shame and misery, and there was nothing left for him but to become a monk and a teacher. Heloise, not yet twenty, consumated herself sacrifice and took the veil. Later she became an abbess of a nunnery where she lived under universal esteem for her knowledge and character. But what have made Abelard and Heloise famous are her celebrated letters to Abelard. These letters express all of the pent up emotions of her soul remaining an unsurpassed utterance of human passion and woman devotion.

On the death of Abelard in 1142 his remains were carried off in secrecy and given over to the tender care of Heloise. Before his death he founded a chapel and hermitage and when he had become an abbot he gave the hermitage to Heloise and her sisterhood for a dwelling naming it Paraclete.

Here she buried him and for twenty years she watched over his grave and when she died she was buried beside him. In 1817 the remains of Abelard and Heloise were removed to the Cemetery of Pere Lechaise at Paris and buried in the same grave. Then they built a Sarcophagns with the recumbent figures of the lovers on the cover.

There is never a lack of fresh wreaths and flowers left by lovers who regard the tomb as a shrine of disappointed love.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

It saves many a stitch if the house wife mends the colthes before putting them in the laundry.

Sweet apple cider has about the same food value as fresh apples.

To clean fur, first sponge it well with gasoline to loosen the dirt. If it is very soiled, rub in cornmeal while the fur is still damp, then beat out the meal, and brush the fur thoroughly. Finish by hanging the fur in the sunshine for several hours.

Grape juice put up now may be used in jellies and beverages later in the season; and a simple and quick way to make jelly from the juice is by the addition of fruit pectin.

HEALTH

When oven wishes to reduce, don't begin by starving ones self, but find out the foods which do not fatten. Eat pine apple for breakfast with your whole wheat or rye bread and a small portion of meat. For lunch and dinner have plenty of vegetable green and principally of the leaf variety. Avoid much sugar and candy which are very fattening. But do not go hungry if possible for that is liable to reduce resistance, and weaken your whole system.

FASHIONS

Glittering Buttons

Huge, brightly gleaming buttons are one of the outstanding trimmings of the season. The newest and smartest are of polished metal in silver finish. Four of them, as large as a silver dollar, are used up the front of a henna jersey blouse. Or two may finish a surplice closing, placed just below the bust. Five of them, about the size of a quarter, are used on the white vest of a black crepe frock, with a red belt. Single buttons of 50-cent size may fasten the neckline or the cuffs or the belt. Shiny buttons in gold finish are also seen, but less often. And in dressier garments, especially of velvet, there are buttons of brilliants. A negligee of flame-colored velvet is asteed with a double row of rhinestone buttons about the size of a quarter, and very fascinating they are.

New Vogue Brings Belted Fur Coats

This winter the waistline is coming back, not only in dresses but in coats. Even day-time fur coats have that smart belt which stamps this season's styles as entirely different.

One of the smartest coats seen in the movie colony was a brown ermine with large shawl collar and a wide suede belt which Helen Twelvetrees wore one cold Hollywood evening. Again she was seen in a white astrakhan short jacket with a black belt. A black dress and small black hat made it a stunning outfit, indeed.

Bronze Shoes

Bronze shoes have come back again to Paris. They are worn not only, with the season's browns, of which there is a big range of shades, but also with the blue and greens, particularly in dull silk crepes. The new bronze is either bright copper in tine or reddish.

Read Before Venturing to Quote Shakespeare

When you have written some verses or made a wireless set, or achieved something of which you are rather proud, have you never said, with becoming modesty: "A poor thing, sir, but mine own." The quotation really begins "An ill-favored thing." Again, do you not often hear of something becoming small by degrees and beautifully less? That is a useless phrase, but it is not what the author wrote. He said "fine by degrees."

A common misquotation is "A goodly apple rotten at the core." Heart, not core, is the correct word. Similarly you should chew the food (not the cud) of sweet and bitter fancy.

There are some quotations which we make correctly, but with an entirely wrong meaning. When, for instance, we quote "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," we usually imply that some particular event has drawn all creeds or nations or classes closer together. All that Shakespeare meant by the line was that in one way all human beings are very much alike.

Perhaps the strangest instance of all is to be found in the phrase "More honored in the breach than in the observance," which we take to mean that some rule is more often broken than kept. If you turn up "Hamlet," Act 1, Scene 4, you will find that Hamlet is speaking of the drinking bouts which disgrace the court. "It is a custom," he says, "more honored in the breach than the observance," meaning a custom that it would be more honorable to abandon than to keep up.—London Tit-Bits.

Cremation Long in Use for Disposal of Dead

Cremation is one of the three common methods of disposing of human remains which antedate history, the others being simple exposure and burial or entombment. Cremation was originally widely prevalent among the Indo-European races. Throughout northern Europe graves of the Bronze age contain not skeletons but urns for funeral ashes. Cremation was the general practice of the Romans for hundreds of years, while the Greeks also practiced it to a great extent. Many of the early American Indians burned their dead; the custom was common of old in England and in Gallic and Germanic Europe; and in India and parts of other oriental countries it is regularly followed today.

With the spread of Christianity, however, cremation became a rare thing. Charlemagne is said to have punished with death those who practiced it. Discussions looking toward its re-establishment began a century or two ago, but nothing came of them until Italy sanctioned cremation in 1852 by revoking prohibitory laws. It was legalized in France in 1887, and had been instituted in England two years earlier. It is now practiced to some extent in almost every country.

The Bell That Never Tolled

The Czar Kolokol lives in no palace and rules no nation; in fact, he does not live at all, being not a ruler, but a bell. The Czar Kolokol is the name of the largest bell in the world and the tourist may see it on its pedestal of granite at the foot of the tower of Ivan in the Kremlin, Moscow. It weighs 200 tons and at the base is 11 inches thick, while it is 54 feet in circumference. It is a broken bell; broken, it is said, when it was first tested, but it was never hung; the injury occurred before it could be made to ring, so that it is devoid of all tone. It has bas-reliefs showing the Czar Alexis Milkhallovitch and the Czarista Anna Ivanova.

Curious Request

In the old parish church of a small village not far from Swindon, Wiltshire, England, is an interesting tablet. It bears the following inscription: "To the memory of John Harding's 'will,' who died September 20, 1721. He gave by his will to the poor of the parish that have no collection out of the parish the sum of ten shillings a year, to be paid yearly at that time of the year he died, out of his ground called Pills, now in the possession of his widow, who duly pays the same, and after her death to be paid by the next taker of the ground, and so on to the world's end."

Beauvais Tapestry

Beauvais, so often seen by tourists on the way from Dieppe to Paris, now has a new, although sad, interest as the scene of the great dirigible disaster of October 4, 1930. It is an ancient town, where great tapestries have been made for centuries. Tourists have chiefly sought it for its interesting cathedral and for its Place de l'hotel de Ville, which contains a statue to Jean Hachette, who led the women of Beauvais to victory against Charles the Bold in 1472.

Just a Suggestion

The owner of a large business was interviewing applicants for the post of office boy. He had a boy in front of him and was asking him all manner of questions.

"Now," went on the employer, "I'm looking for some one who must be exceptionally sharp and who must cost me very little."

"Well," said the boy, "I reckon you'd better send out for a lemon."

Positive Proof of FORD ECONOMY

City of Detroit purchases 137 new Ford cars
Hundreds now in use prove low cost of operation

THESE 137 new Ford cars represent one of the largest deliveries ever made to a municipality at one time.

21 radio-equipped Ford scout cars were traded in on this purchase. They had been operated day and night for two years in heavy traffic and all kinds of weather.

Their individual records ranged from 78,434 miles to 143,723 miles with a grand total of 2,283,097 miles. The operating cost of the 21 cars was 2.284 cents a mile — less than 2 1/3 cents. This cost included all fuel, oil, tires, repairs and every other item except depreciation and insurance.

Of 577 Ford cars in Detroit City service, the 300 in the Police Department traveled a total of 6,591,937 miles during the past fiscal year, at an average cost of 2.9 cents a mile.

Many claims have been made on operating costs, but here in the carefully kept motor car records of the City of Detroit is positive proof of Ford economy.

In the paragraphs above, it is seen that 21 Ford scout cars average less than 2 1/3 cents a mile and 300 Ford cars in all branches of Detroit police work averaged 2.9 cents a mile!

Day and night, twenty-four hours a day, these Ford cars are in operation. Few branches of transportation demand such grueling service. The records show that low fuel and oil consumption is but one of the Ford's many economies. Ford materials, simplicity of design and accuracy in manufacturing provide unusual strength, stamina and freedom from replacements and repairs.

The individual car buyer as well as the purchasing department of a city or a business cannot afford to ignore the proved economy of the Ford car.
