MIRANDA

Miranda is one of the most appealing of Shakespeare characters. She is the heroine of that delightful and fantastic play, The Tempest.

In the opening scene there is a great storm at sea and the King of Naples, his son Ferdinand, and all the nobles in his company are cast upon an island, in different groups so that each group thinks the others are drowned.

In the next scene we find Prospero, the lord of the island with his daughter Miranda. She is lamenting to Prospero that great ship is wrecked and all aboard seem to be drowned, but her father assures her that the ship is safe and so are those on board. Then he tells her who has never known any life except on this island, the story of his life. He was the Duke of Milan, but loving to study, he left the cares his dukedom more and more to his brother whom he loved and trusted. But the brother coveted the dukedom for himself so he carried out the plan of putting the Duke and his little daughter, Miranda, a child of three, in a leaky boat thinking thus to put an end to them both. Fortunately the noble, Gonzala who was ordered to carryout his orders, placed in the boat, food and water, and the books that Prospero most loved to study. Instead of sinking to the bottom, the boat was cast on an island. Here Prospero found a cell, and he brought his books and his little daughter. Having learned magic through his studies, he decided to explore the island and hearing groans and lamentations he found many dryads and spirits confined in the trunks of trees. This was done by the wicked soceress Sycorak. She thus punished everyone who did not obey her and her ghoulish son, Calibran.

These poor sufferers, Prospero released from their torture and at the death of Sycorax, took Calibran and tried to teach him, but he proved so evil that Prospero compelled him to do all kinds of manuel labor, and by his power of magic, would cause him to have fearful pains if he disobeyed him. And in this island Miranda grew to womenhood, never seeing a women, "except her reflection in the glass," as she said. Ariel, one of the spirits that Prospero released had been sent by him to raise the storm when he knew who the passengers were.

And again Ariel was sent, after making himself invisible, to bring the king's son to the cove. And there, though he was so grieved at the supposed death of his father, he was entranced by the beauty of Miranda and she felt the same way toward him.

It was just as Prospero wished, but fearing that Ferdinand would think he had won Miranda too easily, Prospero began to rail at the Prince and give him hard tasks to do. It was then that the beauty of Miranda's character stands out. Her anxiety and sympathy for her lover, and her loyalty to her father show such self forgetfulness and filial love. Ariel is finally sent to bring the whole party together and the joy of the meeting and Prospero's telling who he was, is the grand climax of the play.

The last scene ends with the whole party including Prospero starting for his dukedom where the wedding is to be celebrated.

CARE OF HEALTH

There is no machine so complicated as the human bodies and it is more necessary to keep them in good repair, than our motors and machines. To see that they are rid of impurites every day that they have plenty of water and are given exercise every day to keep them from getting stiff and heavy is an urgent duty.

If every one would make it a plan to exercise sufficiently, there would not be so much rheumatism and arthritis as there are today. Overeating and other exceses shoud be avoided if people wish to have comfort and health.

What a woman who has a job should cultivate.

Ability to get along with people.

Willingness to learn and to start at the beginning, perhaps at a very small salary, perhaps in a very insignificant job, in order to learn.

An open-minded readiness to cooperate fully with the policy of the store.

A practical viewpoint. The ability to adapt one's ideals to the needs of the moment, it may be to lay aside dreams in order to be practical. Several cases were spoken of where women had failed to make good in this work because they refused to look at the situation in a practical manner.)

Willingness to work hard and to step into any breach, and, if need be, to do oneself the work ordinarily apportioned to others.

RECIPES

Long-Necked Vase

A simple way to clean a vase so narrow that an ordinary slender brush will not go down it, is to fill the vase partly full of warm, soapy water, and to insert a knitting needle of a suitable size into the stem of a stiff feather. The knitting needle will go down the slenderest stem, while the feather will sweep the otherwise unreachable wide base.

StrawberryMeringue

1 quart strawberries
1-2 cupful sugar.
White of 3 eggs.

Wash and stem strawberries. Pile in a high mound on a flat baking dish. Dredge with one-half cupful sugar. Beat egg whites stiff; add 3-4 cupful sugar, folding in lightly. Spread this meringue over the mounded berries. Bake in a very hot oven .450 degrees) until meringue is a delicate brown. Serve either hot or cold.

Blossom Salad

4 lettuce leaves
1 can pineapple
10 strawberries
2 teaspoons powdered sugar
1-4 pound white cream cheese
4 tablespoons walnuts.
Mayonnaise

Place two slices of pineapple on each lettuce leaf. Form small balls of cream cheese, fill center of pineapple and cover with grated walnuts. Slice berries in halves and dip bottoms in powdered sugar. Arrange five on each salad so as to form scarlet petals around the cheese-nut centers. Decorate edge of pineapple with mayonnaise, using a pastry set, or place a tablespoonful to one side.

Tapioca Pudding

1-3 cupful pearl tapioca
2 cupfuls milk
2 egg whites, beaten stiff
2 egg yolks, beaten
1-3 cupul sugar
Speck of salt
1-2 teaspoonful vanilla.

Wash and pick over the tapioca and place in top of double boiler Cover with boilng water. Add the milk when the water has been absorbed and cook the tapioca until clear and soft. Beat the yolks of the eggs, add the salt and sugar and the hot milk mixture and cook until it thickens like soft custard. Remove from the fire and fold in the egg.

LA MODE

Evening Dresses

A new feature is the velvet girdle, matching the evening jacket. Contrasting evening belts have general popularity. Another detail is the use of smocking in evening coats.

Wide lace shoulder straps are sponsored by Patou as a variation of the summer lace dresses. Other evening materials include multicolor prints in taffeta and chiffon and velvet brocaded chiffon.

A white silk cocktail dress with a matching bolero forms an ensemble of distinction. A costume of similar style is shown in black moire.

Handkerchiew print scarfs, folded triangularly, form a colorful accessory. Silver fox is used for scarfs and trims.

Purple, pansy and red are used in striking evening dresses. For daytime Patou favors black, white and beige.

Sleeves Are Smart

Most of the smartest evening gowns this summer will have sleevs or shoulder coverings at least, but daytime frocks are generally sleeves or shoulder coverings at least, but daytime frocks are generally sleeveless. Silk jersey, pique, printed linens and lacy cotton wevaes in many instances merely feature straps over the shoulder. Some have cape effects. Several new evening models have full sleeves reaching to the elbow.

Two-Fabric Idea

An expression of the two-fabric idea is found in the posing of embroidered organdie over flower-printed taffeta. Plain colored taffeta is frequently used for the slip of sheer cotton frocks, especially in bridesmaids' types, where the color of the slip is repeated in ribbon sash.

New Length Skirts

The ankle is a gaugee of skirt lengths. For summer the formal afternoon dress and the informal evening sress are hovering around a new length—hitting the ankle bone square in the longest version, but also in a great many models going up 1 or 2 inches.

Lejeune Got "Thriller" After War Was Over

When General Lejeune was asked to relate his most thrilling war experience he smiled and said:

"It did not come in the war, but after it, when the troops of occupation were passing through Belgium. We were given a wonderful reception and in one city I was on the platform and had to make a speech. When I had finished our chaplain arose and to my amazement and horror announced that Mlle. Clementine, the famous dancer who was traveling with me, would entertain with some of her inimitable dances.

"And how she danced, while I sat there in horror, knowing that my reputation was ruined beyond repair.

"Imagine, then, my relief when, at the end of the dance, Mlle Clementine removed a very pretentious wig and I recognized the close-cropped black head and smiling countenance of my very masculine soldier-cook and the chaplain explained the joke to the audience.

"'Ah,'" I exclaimed jumping to my feet, "'if he only could cook as well as he dances war would almost be a pleasure.'"

Big Surprise in Store for That Unknown Girl

A Cleveland girl on her vacation, and traveling on the railroad for the first time in her life, was startled when the waiter in the dining car remarked:

"You haven't ridden with us lately, have you?"

She didn't bother to tell him he had the wrong person. He continued:

"What has become of that girl that used to travel with you?"

"Oh," said the imaginative Cleveland girl, "haven't you heard? Why, she went to Europe and married an English nobleman with millions."

"Why," he returned, "I thought she was married already!"

"She was," the girl returned, glibly, "but her husband eloped with a movie actress, so she divorced him."

And she calmly ordered dessert, and gave herself up to pleasant reflections as to what would happen when the unknown girl boarded the train one of these days.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Long-Lived Bulgarians

As a rule, all the Bulgarian peasants are exceedingly hard working people, and as it is purely physical labor it is no wonder that the spring of their life is of short duration and the autumn approaches quickly. At forty they begin to look old, and what is worse they feel old themselves, for in many cases they have become grandparents. But otherwise they are much healthier and live to a greater age than their brothers in the cities and towns, where the conditions of life are not so strenuous. Their looks are spoilt by the sun, the wind, hard work and toil. Life—its cares and joys—they take much more philosophically than the populations in the towns. They give much, and take so little for themselves—there lies the secret of their long life and of their productive force.—Bulgarian British Review.

Old English City Gives December Odd Welcome

December, writes a Manchester (England) Guardian columnist, is not the kind of month, one would imagine, whose entry would normally be singled out for a civic welcome but in Colchester from the earliest times it has been the custom for the town crier to perambulate the streets at midnight on November 30 to give an official welcome to December in the cry—

Past twelve and a fine (or wet) morning.
Cold December hath come in,
And poor men's backs are clothed thin;
The trees are bare, the birds are mute;
A pot and a toast would very well suit.

When Colchester, in step with the march of progress, some time ago abolished the office of town crier fears were entertained that this time-worn custom would lapse. But, though robbed of the hohor of official recognition, the ancient ceremony still is faithfully performed by the former town crier, now acting, as it were, in a freelance capacity. The origin of the custom has been long forgotten, but it is known to be of great antiquity and is said to be without parallel in this country.

Died of Newspaper Diet

That the fallow deer in captivity have some quaint tastes in the matter of food is shown by the fact that one of these animals in the London Zoological garden died from eating waste paper, the post mortem revealing that the stupid creature had consumed 16 pounds of newspapers and paper bags.

Snakes occasionally indulge in cannibalism, but appear none the worse for it. A hamadryad accidentally placed in quarters occupied by a number of cobras, promptly ate several of the latter and lived to ponder on the deed. Incidentally, the society also pondered somewhat deeply on this deed, for the cannibal's meal cost several hundred dollars.

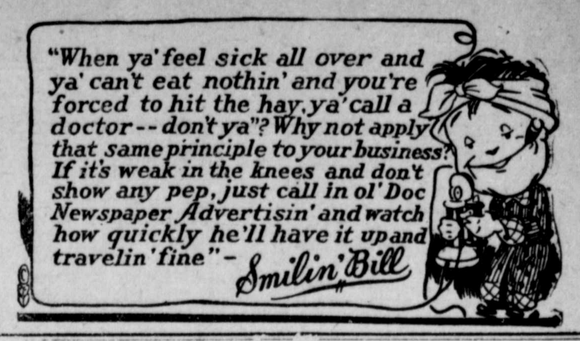

Another queer meal was attempted by a python who did his best to swallow a blanket but discovered that the unwonted task was beyond him when he had engulfed half of the material.

More Hairy Than Apes

Scientists state that human beings, generally, have more hairs on their heads than some of the apes. The average number of scalp hairs a square centimeter was 312 for man and 307 for thirteen specimens of the large anthropoid apes. Gorillas are less hairy-chested than many men. Two adults had only six and three hairs, respectively, a square centimeter, whereas a man—not a very hairy-chested one at that—had nine. Scalp hair varies in density among the human races, it appears. Six adult negroes averaged 297 hairs a square centimeter and three adult white men had a few more, with an average count of 333.

Delicate Vocal Chords

A prominent throat specialist states that there are numerous cases of babies who make sounds like those of a dog barking and the characteristic sharp whine of the seal. But usually, he adds, such phenomena are due to a form of hysteria and are not permanent. Any growth, no matter how slight, on the laryngeal area, or any splitting or paralysis of the vocal cords, immediately alters the tone and pitch of a person's voice. Singers have to exercise the most scrupulous care of the throat, because even a minor injury to the vocal cords seriously impairs the quality of the voice. —Detroit News.
