FURROWS

Mr. Editor:

We ain't nominated a democrat fer president out in our community yet but some are doin a lot of talkin and a few is doin a lot of thinkin. The think-don't talk much and the talkers don't think much. I suppose it's about the same way everywhere.

There is a good deal of talk about blockin Roosevelt and runnin in a dark horse. Whenever party leaders start out tryin to block a man fer a certain office it is a right good sign that the man they want to block is the man the people want. Of course Mr. Roosevelt has done a lot of backin and hedgin and straddlin and the like, but he seems to be gettin a lot of people to believe in him. I can't say as I am fer him very strong like, but he don't seem to be advocatin puttin more burdens on the poor people of this country. I ain't fer Mr. Al Rascob Smith neither. He is all tied up with the money interests and wants to saddle that sales tax on this counry. If he gets the nomination and runs on a sales tax platform he wil be beat worse than he wuz in 1928. And he ought to be. He tries to hide the real issue by callin it a manufacturers' tax, but a skunk smells just as bad even if it has some fancy name tied to it.

And then that bond issue that Al is advocating is just another way of makin the poor pay fer the mistakes of the rich. The rich will buy the bonds and they will be exempt from taxes and the poor will have to pay taxes to pay interest on the bonds and the principal too. A certain writer in a city paper said the other day that Smith's speech wuz the best anybody had made fer a long time. Well, I didn't hear it, but from what I read about it I ain't anxious to hear the worst one that has been made. I don't hear many speechs and I ain't much of a judge of speeches, but that ain't my idea of a good speech.

There has been a lot of talk about Mr. Young as a candidate. And it's funny how eager the party leaders wuz to take Mr. Young's statement that he couldn't accept the nomination as final. It looks like they wuz just a little over-anxious fer him to say just that. They don't aim to let him change his mind neither.

Well, he ain't the man fer president because he has connections that would hamper him a lot. But if he could break off from the big interests I ain't so sure that he wouldn't make a sensible president after all. Bein president is a hard job and a man ought not to be in the wrong light when he is elected. Mr. Young has a lot of good sound sense.

The democratic party used to be the poor people's party and wuz always standin up fer the workin people, but things has changed a lot in the last few years. The party leaders are just about like the republicans now. The republicans has got the country in a jam and the democrats want to keep it there. What we nead now is somebody like "old Hickory" to lead us out of the woods. We have a lot of leaders but they all want to lead us back into the woods. If the democrats keep on they will lose their last chance to do something fer this country that will help people to enjoy the blessins that belong to them by right of inheritanre.

Zack Pteers says that there are so many political doctors now that the patient is likely to die from bein over-doctored.

Tom Barclay 'lowed the other day that he wuz gardenin fer a livin and keepin store fer pastime.

Jed Hathaway says that if the country will let him keep his farm a few years longer he will manage to live till he dies and then he ain't interested in where the taxes come from.

'Membr th time when it took a man whole hour to shave on Sunday mornin?

Yours truly,
JOSIAH ALLEN WEATHERBY.
