SUGGESTS WATER FOWL SOLUTION

likelihood of a season of this length until a constructive waterfowl restoration program has been started and an increase in the supply is apparent.

It is generally agreed that observance of the laws governing the shooting of waterfowl can be greatly increased by keeping the sportsmen near the shooting grounds for as long a period as practical during the time waterfowl are present.

A large majority of sportsmen who enjoy waterfowl shooting voluntarily observe season and bag limit laws and insist upon their observance by others in the locality in which they shoot. At the close of a short open season, such as we had in 1931, true sportsmen stop shooting. When the sportsmen who obey and law stop shooting, the pot hunter and the trapper start work with far more detrimental effects on the waterfowl than legal shooting possibly could have.

The problem which confronts sportsmen interested in waterfowl shooting and the agencies charged with the protection and increase of waterfowl alike, is how the sportsmen can be kept in the field during the time when waterfowl are present without permitting the existing supply to be reduced below its present level, until such time as an increase in the number of ducks and geese is plainly evident.

Some method of restricting the total annual kill obviously is called for. The three possibe restrictive measures are:

1. Smaller bag limits.
2. Shorter shooting hours.
3. Fewer shooting days.

Bag limit laws are violated notoriously in some sections. The utter impossibility of even reasonable enforcement of them is generally recognized. It therefore appears that nothing could be gained by reducing the present Federal daily bag limit of fifteen ducks.

Shorter shooting hours have proved highly benefical and comparatively easy of enforcement in localities in which they have been tried, but their radvantages can only be learned through experience. It is doubtful whether regulations limiting the shooting hours each day would be at the present time. However, we believe that every effort should be made to acquaint waterfowl shooters with the advantages of shorter shooting hours.

It appears therefore that the sole reis practicable at the present time is maining restriction on shooting which the "rest day" plan, under which shooting is prohibited on certain days of each week. Rest days have proved effective in conserving ducks and satisfactory to the sportsmen in the localities in which they have been in use. It seems perfectly logical that rest days would be equally effective and acceptable if applied on a national scale.

If the Secretary of Agriculture, on the advice of the Regional Advisory Board, were to fix definite open seasons of ninety days each in three zones as shown on the zone map, sportsmen in all sections of the country would have shooting opportunities each season when waterfowl were present. The only question to decide each year would be the number of shooting days which the supply warranted. This could be determined by a careful study of breeding conditions and a sufficient number of rest days established by regulation.

It would of course be extremely advisable for the Regional Advisory Board to consult the game officials of each State in an endeavor to meet as nearly as possible the wishes of the sportsmen as to which days each week would be preferred as rest days.

The adoption of this plan would reduce to a minimum the guess work and uncertainty which has characterized the fixing of open seasons for waterfowl in the past. It provides a simple, effective and flexible method of controlling the supply by limiting the total annual kill.

We believe the foregoing plan is the first orderly attempt to regulate waterfowl shooting ever offered to the game officials and sportsmen of the country.

Adoption of the constructive waterfowl restoration program contained in "More Waterfowl by Assisting Nature" published by the Foundation, should assure a return to a full ninety day waterfowl season in a comparatively few years.

BETTERTON

Betterton is spic and span for the Fourth of July holiday. All of the hotels, cottages and amusements are open and practically everything has reduced its prices and the usual crowd is expected for this week end.

The Ladies Aid Society held its last business meeting until fall in the Sunday School room last Friday evening. A special feature of the social hour was the declamations given by Misses Helen Harris, Evelyn Crew and Isaac Covey. These three speakers were in the declamation contest given at the high school last week.

Mrs. M. V. Turner entertained the members of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society at her home on Thursday evening.

The Betterton Chamber of Commerce of which Mr. Charles H. Brice is president, held a meeting at the Betterton House on Monday evening, discussing ways and means of helping the community during the summer season.

Thieves stole about sixty hens from Mr. Arthur Brice last week and all of the chickens of Mr. Jesse Coleman and Mr. Robert Crew the same night.

Mr. Horace Wheeler, a teacher at Reisterstown High School is attending summer school. Miss Jewell and Miss Leager are also at summer school.

Mr. Clarence Smith, of Drexel Intitute is at home for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Crownhart and sons have opened their home in Betterton for the summer.

Mr. Howard Beachamop Owens and Mr. Allen Bonwill are at Camp Red Cloud, Penna., where they have positions for the summer.

Mr. Norman Crew has rented his house for the summer months.

Mrs. Charles Gooding and children, of Wilmington, are spending the summer at the home of Mrs. Goodings parents, Capt. and Mrs. Horace Brice.

Mrs. Grace Whitehurst, of Baltimore, spent the past week with her mother, Mrs. Mattie Tull.
