PICNIC DAYS ARE HERE

A VEST POCKET ESSAY ON PICNICS

In these troubled days people are getting back to old familiar things, as barnyard golf, politics, holes in a sock, pipes, borrewed garden tools, odd pants to match a coat and vest, and picnics. Everybody likes the latter and it's helpful for a bird suffering from "jack paralysis." A real picnic is where a multitude of flies, bees, ants, mosquitoes and chiggers are eating on and with a few people with a "back to nature" urge. It's no trouble to organize one—just call up a few friends and tell 'em what to bring and where to meet. Even the busy ants and bees take time off to come and enjoy the party. Some one eventually gets the fire going good, the coffee flavored with ashes, and some sticks cut for the purpose of roasting the fingers and meat at the same time. This stage should never be reached before dusk and not until the fussy folks are hungry enough to quit bewailing the forgotten forks. Then watch the bird with the delicate stomac, who cooks at home in a purely advisory capacity, eat with relish a burned steak while chasing an ant through the fringes of his bald dome. Grandma shamelessly wipes her greasy fingers on her petticoat, while granddaughter's simply have to stay greasy. Most members of the party feel that they are cheating the government out of an entertainment tax—when they look at the others. Maybe that's why most any normal person will leave a good dinner and an overstuffed chair at home for a perch on a bumpy log with an overstuffed tummy. Ain't it fun?

It is estimated that insects cause a loss of more than $2,000,000,000 a year in this country—not including those attending picnics. Animals lost by preventable disease, boost this total cost way up past the aforementioned chicken feed. The lowly and much maligned hog that produces about half the meat consumed in these more or less United States, costs his owner plenty, if not given proper care. Hog cholera is the chief enemy of this producer of wealth, hams, chittlin's, and grunts. It is caused by a germ that has no eggs, wings, motors or even a kiddie-scooter. How does it get about then? In Maryland, chiefly by being given a free ride in a loose hog, sick with cholera, to the neighboring herds, or by being fed to susceptible pigs in kitchen refuse, containing infected bones, rinds and scraps of pork. Man, by his consent or carelessness, is the chief spreader of cholera. Hog cholera virus is a hitch-hiker that takes the hogs for a "ride" and causes tremendous losses each year. If you want hams from happy hogs, refuse to transport this dangerous killer to them.

You can't fool the "Electric Ear"...*

New TYDOL wins anti-knock road Test of 17 gasolines

Test car with analyzer and sound recording units . . . Equipment truck of the Western Electric Company, ready to test 17 gasolines bought in the open market.

"ELECTRIC EAR" is the popular name for the new and amazingly accurate instruments which record sound in decibels. The "Electric Ear" was perfected by the Electrical Research Products, Inc These same super-sensitive instruments were used by the Noise Abatement Commissions of America's leading cities.

This test conducted and computed by
ELECTRICAL RESEARCH PRODUCTS, INC.
Subsidiary of WESTERN ELECTRIC COMPANY

A DECIBEL is an engineering unit denoting volume and intensity of sound. In this test the lowest decibel rating (new Tydol) indicates the best anti-knock gasoline.

A HOT engine, a heavy load, a steep hill—there's the real test of anti-knock quality. Laboratory knock ratings are apt to go hay-wire under these real road conditions—as every motorist knows.

So the new Sound Meter—the "Electric Ear"—made this amazing test on the road, the first of its kind.

It caught every knock in each of 17 gasolines—all non-ethyl gasolines, all bought in the open market from road-side stations. It registered that knock. Hour after hour, for 3 days, the "Electric Ear" checked and triple-checked every gasoline.

Same car. Same load. Same speed. Same grade . . . but what a difference in knock rating! Look at the decibel chart. You'll see where the New TYDOL stands—It heads the list in real anti-knock quality. Try it today. Against any gasoline.
