FURROWS

There is a lot of people saying that we talk hard times too much. But folks can't help talking hard times when times is really hard. And if they ain't hard now I ain't never seen none. The merchants in all the small towns that I've been are not selling enough goods to make more'n a bare living and some of them ain't selling that much. It ain't going to be long afore some of 'em have to close up shop and hunt a job of some sort. But what are they going to do? Jobs are scarce and so is business. If times ain't hard they ain't never been.

And it ain't no better with the farmers. But the farmers can live on what they make if they will plant stuff to eat. A lot of 'em are depending on their milk checks fer their living, and the milk people is turnin down a lot of the farmer's milk, and they suffer losses from it. But I say that these milk farmers ought to start right in now and get ready fer winter vegetables.

Plenty of food can be made on the farms to keep the family going, and wheat and corn are both good fer human consumption. Of course money will be scarce next winter but people can git along without much money if they have plenty to eat.

And another thing. These town folks will be glad to git vegetables this winter fer at least a part of what the farmers owe them. Of course the banks can't take produce fer the farmers' notes, but they can wait awile longer fer their money. They'll have to. Just take your stuff in to the merchants and see if they don't want to eat some of it. If they want to keep on buying from somebody that don't owe them nothing, then let them wait fer their pay. One good turn deserves another.

It's all right fer merchants to talk about buying at home, but they git a lot of their trade from country people and they'll have to take what the country people have to pay with. That's buying at home too.

Business is going to be slack next winter and we are going to feel the pinch more than we think now. And we may have to change our ways of living to make ends meet. But there's just one thing to do, and that's to make every thing go as far as it will. We've heard a lot of hollering about spending to bring back prosperity, but we ain't going to git prosperity back near as soon as we want. What we need in this country if fer people to learn to economize more and waste less. I ain't no prophet, but conditions is going to make some people learn to save. I don't see much better times ahead than we have had fer quite a spell and I can't blame people fer talking about hard times. That subject is the one uppermost in everybody's mind. People just have to think about what hits them hardest and what they think about most is what they will talk most about. Nobody can keep quiet about what is hurting them and if these times ain't hurting people now I don't know what is. I say let people talk hard times if they want to and I figger that's what they are going to do.

TEETH AND HEALTH

"MILLSTONES"

Comparing the teeth to millstones, Dr. Richard C Leonard, Chief of the Division of Oral Hygiene of the Marylend State Department of Health, said: "Whether the teeth, often called the 'millstones' of the body, function satisfactorly as grinders of the food we eat, or whether they become like the proverbial 'millstones around our neck', constant source of annoyance, depends upon three main factors. 1. Structural strength, resistance to wear and decay. 2 Constant supervision, correction of defects. 3. Scrupulous cleanliness.

"Our teeth resemble millstones in depending upon their structural strength for their ability to perform their task of grinding food. In the actual mill, only those stones that have a definite resistance to wear and destruction can be used as grinders of grain. Teeth must have similar qualities of strength and resistance to decay. In both sorts of millstones, structural strength depends especially upon the elements that go into their make-up. The framework of our teeth is composed largely of calcium and phosphorus salts. Their resistance to wear and tear depends to a considerable degree upon whether the diet of the expectant mother and of the growing child has been sufficiently rich in the mineral salts and vitamins that give this quality to the teeth. These necessary elements are found in all dairy products, in the green leafy vegetables and in certain fruits, especially oranges and tomatoes.

"In selecting stones for a mill, great care has to be taken to be sure they are free from imperfections. Equal care has to be taken o see that the teeth are free from defects, The teeth are not always perfect as they grow out from the gum. Sofetimes they are pitted with tiny crevices, that will deepen or extend if not attended to promptly. This can be done easily, painlessly and permanently, by a competent dentist.

As to our third factor, mouth cleanliness. Dirty millstones are unsatisfactory as grinders of grain. They must be kept clean if they are to perform their tasks properly. So must the teeth. People who refuse to use flour ground between dirty millstones, in a filthy mill, should realize that that is what happens when food is taken into a dirty mouth to be chewed by corroded or decayed grinders. Teeth that are not clean are not only a menace to health but an affront to common decency. Scrupulous cleanliness calls for a thorough brushing of the teeth, morning and night.

Conservation methods have begun to show concrete results in the number of oysters on the bottoms of Maryland waters, and the decrease in the supply which existed several years ago has has been turned into an increase which will more than take care of the inroads made by oystermen who thus earn their living, Swepson Earl, State Conservation Commissioner, announced a few days ago.
