GETTING READY FOR SCHOOL

HAVE THEM VACCINATED

Parents of children who will enter school this fall, are reminded by Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health, of the Maryland law which requires all children to be vaccinated against smallpox before they can be accepted in any school in the State.

"The family physician is expected to vaccinate every baby and young child under his care," Dr. Riley said, "and the parents should see that it is done. The earlier it is attended to, the better it is for the child.

"Until a child enters school," Dr. Riley continued, "the responsibility for having him or her protetced against smallpox, rests with the parents. After that it is shared by the teachers. In accordance with the Maryland Vaccination Law, any teacher who permits the enrollment of an unvaccinated child, or children, is liable to a fine of ten dollars for each and every offense.'

"Smallpox is comparatively rare in Maryland, but unvaccinated people in Maryland are just as susceptible to the disease and just as likely to get it, if exposed to it, as unvaccinated persons are in other communities. We owe our comparative freedom from the disease to the willing, intelligent, cooperation of parents, doctors and teachers with State, county and city departments of health in carrying out the provisions of the Maryland Vaccination Law, in seeing that children are vaccinated either in infancy or before they reach school age.

"Sometimes it is necessary for us to notice what is happening in other parts of the country in order that we may realize what would occur in Maryland if our people were not protected against smallpox. The disease is much more common than most people realize. It is prevalent at all times and in all parts of the world. A recent report from the U. S. Public Health Service shows that 482 cases were reported in the United States, alone, during the four weeks ending on July 15 and that many more cases were reported from other parts of the world. Thirty-two states were represented in these 482 cases. I am glad to be able to say that Maryland was not among them. We have had only one case of smallpox in the State in two years, and only 40 in five years—9 in 1927; 22 in 1928; 8 in 1929, none in 1930; one in 1931 and none since them. Smallpox is preventable as our record shows. "In many of the counties, parents are inclined to wait until just before school opens to have their children vaccinated. The fall and winter term will begin in a few days and children who have not been vaccinated should be taken to their family doctors, without further delay, and protected against this entirely preventable disease."
