FURROWS

BY JOSIAH ALLEN WEATHERBY

Congress meets in December fer its next orgy of spendin. This is a right good time to begin writin in to members of Congress, both Senators and Representatives, tellin 'em in no uncertain manner that it is time to do something about reducin this tax burden. It ain't no use to mince words about it nuther. Just tell 'em how the voters will be counted in the next election if they don't vote fer tax reduction. They'll listen to that kind of talk. And that's about the only kind they will listen to.

I wuz readin in a paper where Mr. Bernard M. Baruch said the budget of the Federal Government could be reduced a billion dolars. And he tells how it can be done. I ain't no big national character like Mr. Baruch, but I can tell Congress how it can be reduced some more yet. First off, I would not appropriate any money to build a single post office fer a period of at least five years. I don't know exactly how much that would save, but it would run into the millions. And there ain't a place in the country that can't make out with the post office they have fer a few years longer. And if this three-cnt postage stays on a few years, some post offices could make out with still smaller quarters than the ones they have now. Well, there ain't no sense in spendin a lot of money to build new post office buildins when they don't need all the space they have now. That's one way to cut the budget. Another way is to cut down the operation expenses of the pos office system. In a lot of places there is too many clerks. Why, some of them almost have to work in shifts so they can keep out of each other's way. And then there is too many rural carriers fer the amount of work they have to do. Plenty of carriers work only two or three hours a day and draw full pay fer it too. I ain't begrudgin any feller his full pay, but he ought to be willin to do a day's work fer it. There is too many carriers fer the amount of service rendered. Then, Congress ought to make these here big advertisin magaziines pay more fer handlin their stuff. I been told that some of these big magazines charge eight to ten thousand dollars fer a page in one issue, and when they have fifty to eighty pages of advertisin and about a dozen pages of readin matter they ought to pay more fer cartin that stuff around to their subscribers.

Another way Congress could save money fer the tax-payers would be to vote not to dredge any creek or other unimportant stream fer an indefinite period. This would save a lot of money. Then Congres should git right down to business and prune off a whole raft of bureaus and commissions and committees and the like. There is too many people drawin pay from the rest of us and doin us no good. I wuz readin a paper that said more than ten per cent of the people in this country is on government pay rools, includin Federal, State and local governments. People can't keep on payin taxes to support more'n a tenth of the people when half that number could do all the necessary work to be done by governments, and still have plenty of time to go fishin. And then, if a lot of them people wuz let out the governments wouldn't have to replace so many desks that is wore out on top by the back part of shoe heels.

There is a lot of ways that Congress could save money fer the tax-payers if the voters would just write in and explain how they wuz goin to vote next time if some substantial reductions didn't take place in their next metin. There ain't nothin that counts with congressmen like votes, and if they find out how many votes is goin agin them they'll be onlly too glad to vote right when they git down to Washington. The voters ought to try it on them now.
