FURROWS

BY JOSIAH ALLEN WEATHERBY

Judges is generally good men and perform a useful service to the community. But when judges git to be about seventy years old, it strikes me that they ought to be allowed to retire in peace from their labors and enjoy the rest of their lives without havin to worry about holdin court and makin decisions on the law and the evidence. Of course some will say that a judge is at his best when he gits old and mellow in judgment. And there has been instances when men has been left on the bench after seventy and rendered good opinions. But as a rule this ain't necessarily true. Justice Holmes served til he wiz a lot older than seventy and wuz active in mind and body. But he wuz the exception and don't prove that the rule is a good one. There is plenty of judges that is old men at seventy.

This here Constitutional Amendment that is to be voted on this fall is fer the purpose of lettin judges hold on after they are past the retirement age of seventy years. Now I figger the present legal retirement age is about right in general. It looks to me like this is a scheme of the politicians to keep some of their friends on the bench when by rights they should step down and let younger men take up the work.

I am old fashioned enough to believe that a man can't do his best work in any line after he is seventy years old, so I ain't strong fer this amendment. There is too much good judge material in this state to let men stay on the bench till they wear out completely. Besides, when a man has been a judge fer a good while he is entitled to a few years of rest before he dies. I say let the Constitution stay like it is and give these younger men the opportunity of gittin in on the judge business before they git so old. And then the older judges can retire and take a good rest before they die.

It ain't a bad sight to see steamboats runnin on our river again. It brings back to mind the days when folks didn't try to live so fast that they didn't git enough enjoyment to make life worth living. I mind the time when this river had plenty of boats runnin on it and they had a lot of freight to haul and the rates wuz cheap. Of course it took a long time to go to the city and you couldn't go and come the same day and do any business, but folks got along right well and had a good time. But people don't git much enjoyment out of life nowadays. They live too fast and spend too much.

This fast livin has ruined business. Take Tom Barclay fer instance. He used to have a big country store business and hired a lot of clerks and sold a lot of goods and made money. Now he ain't got business enough hardly to keep one man to work. He can tend his store all alone and then not have to work all the time. Tom says he is rustin out fer want of something to keep him busy. He says he would ruther wear out than rust out, but the automobiles has just took all his trade right away from him and carried it to the towns and cities. The railroads took the haulin away from the boats, and now the trucks is takin it away from the railroads. But there ain't much business now to take. Tom says if the city stores is all as pore as his is in proportion they ain't doin much either.

It strikes me that this generation had better come down to earth and stop some of this high livin. It ain't goin to git you nowhere but in an early grave. People don't even have time to think nowadays and what thinkin is done is of a cheap grade just like a lot of the goods yu buy at the city stores. There ain't no quality to it. This country would be a lot better off if people would set down and think a little once in awhile.

'Member the time when there wuz family album in the front parlor and a croquet set on the back porch of every home?

The Curbstone Diplomat

WILLIAM S. COLLINS

These birds who sit around town waiting for the stock market to go up should remember that the thermometer does not rise until the weather gets warm. Sticking a match under the thermometer and running it up that way does not make the weather warmer. When business booms your stock will go up.

Any man in business around these parts had better forget his stocks and bonds and think about the price of wheat, corn, milk, tomatoes, etc. Also throw in sea-food and you have our only reason for existance here in Kent. There is no one in business here who does not indirectly get his dividends from agriculture and sea-food products.

So if you are feeling too good about your railroad stocks out west and need something to bring you down, think about the price of our own products.

By request, I ask the question: Why cannot the water be shut off at night when repairs are to be made instead of during the day?

The carnival was only supposed to last until Monday but it looks like it will have to be extended.

The regatta season ended last week end at Oxford, as far as local yachtsmen are concerned. Oxford had a successful regatta and the committee in charge certainly did everything they could to make the guests enjoy themselves.

Walter Moore was chairman of the regatta committee. This name might not mean anything at first sight because fer around here remember him as Walter but at the mention of Toughie Moore, all old timers should recall to mind the peppy quarter-back of the Washington eleven of fifteen or so years ago. Back in the years when Washington used to take two or three scalps during the season and more interest was shown in football generally.

Chestertown's only entry at the regattas his summer has been Howard Strong's Mayflower. Howard is well liked and does much toward drawing visitors here for the Chester River regatta. Next year the Mayflower will sail at the Betterton regatta. Any regatta you go to you are bound to find representatives of the Miles River Yacht Club there, helping out.

THE YOUNG ELECTRIC AGE

Last Sunday a gathering containing a number of distinguished men assembled in Pearl street, New York City, to do honor to the memory of Thomas A. Edison, the occasion being the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the first central electric station in the world. So recent was this revolutionizing event that several of those who were intimately connected with Edison in perfecting the incandescent were present.

This first generating plant, designed to supply 400 lights in the financial district, was built amid much skepticism after $1,000,000 capital had been raised. Today there are over 2,000,000 customers for electric light in New York City alone, and 24,000,000 in the United States. From the modest investment of that first million the electric industry in the United States has grown to require invested capital in excess of $13,000,000,000.

With a life of only two score and ten electricity has become a household, office and factory necessity in every city and hamlet in the land, and a large proportion [illegible] equipped for the use of electrical devices in addition to lighting. The record of the growth of the automobile, reads like fairy tales, except that Grimm himself could not have imagined such young giants.

The superior advantages of electric light and power soon caused its spread to every corner of the globe, and yet the full scope of the industry is far from having been attained. Every year brings out new uses for the mysterious current. There is nothing that man bends to work his will in so many ways, yet knows so little of what it is, whence it comes and where it goes, once it has served his purpose.
