CONDEMNS DUCK BAITING

GAME AND FISH COMMISSIONS CONVENE IN BALTIMORE

The practice of baiting shooting areas and the use of automatic and repeating shotguns in wild fowl hunting were decried and a warning that the wild fowl situation, still acute, warrants careful consideration, was sounded at Tuesday's sessions of the International Association of Game, Fish and Conservation Commissioners in convention at the Lord Baltimore Hotel, Baltimore. With the exception of Mr. Holland, who is editor of Field and Stream, and Judge Miles, who is chairman of the Arkansas Game Commission, the entire group in convention are game commissioners of their respective States.

Disapproval of baited shooting areas in the hunting of wildfowl and the use of the automatic and repeating shotgun in killing ducks and geese was voiced by Bernie Maurek, Game and Fish Commissioner of North Dakota.

"The efficiency of the modern firearms, the development of long-range loads and the use of rapid-fire shotguns are making inroads among our waterfowl far in excess of the ability of nature to reproduce them," said Mr. Maurek.

"The use of the repeating or automatic shotguns means two things—that the expert can easily kill the bag limit or exceed it if he so desires, while the amateur wounds and loses many birds that later die.

"The baiting of shooting grounds cannot be defended from any standpoint of true sportsmanship; it is an admission that the man who resorts to it is unwilling to compete on an equal basis with his fellows; it is an encouragement to the game hog who has the means to take advantage of such an organized practice, and it works a hardship on the hunter who is not financialy able to have te privilege enjoyed by is more fortunate brother."

Mr. Maurek also declared that there is urgent need of remedying the wildfowl situation through the reclaiming of drained areas and to add to the breeding and resting places for wild fowl by the construction of dams and other agencies of water conservation.

Two methods for financing such a program, he explained, would be by means of a tax on shells and a stamp tax of $1 on all licenses for the hunting of wild fowl. Both measures are now before Congress.

Cites Causes For Decrease

Discussion of wild fowl conditions, which occupied most of Tuesday's sessions, was led by W. C. Henderson, associate chief of the United States Bureau, Biological Survey, who sketched some of the underlying causes for the gradual decrease of wild fowl. Reduction of wild land, of lakes and marshes; the increase of wild fowl hunters from a few thousand no longer than sixty years ago to 2,500,000 today; easy means of transportation and destructiveness of modern firearms; disease and drought conditions were some of the agencies he blamed for the decrease of ducks and geese.

As one of the means of increasing the wildfowl population, Mr. Henderson pointed to the work of the Biological Survey in establishing refuges under the migratry bird conservation act.

"In the course of three years more than 3,600,000 acres within 134 units have been examined and appraised to determine their value for water-fowl sanctuary purposes," he said. "Sixteen refuges have been established in fourteen States. We now have control of 254,000 acres.

Drought conditions in the breeding areas during 1929-30, which decreased water fowl to such an extent that the shooting season was cut to thirty days in 1931, have improved considerably, but the situation still bears the closest watching, he declared.

Despite the fact that the kill of wildfowl during 1931 was not more than half of that of the previous season, the number of birds that survived to breed in 1932 was in many places less than in 1931, he said.

"Available data indicate that several important species, including the mallard, back duck, pintail, baldpate, ring-necked duck, Canada goose, blue goose, lesser snow goose brant and black brant, returned to the breeding rangs in more satisfactory numbers than others," he continued.

"The more favorable breeding conditions that have existed this season should have enabled them to produce a sufficient crop of young birds to withstand reasonable harvesting by shooters during the coming open season.

"Other species, including the canvasback, gadwall, redhead, lesser scaup, ruddy duck, buffehead, shoveller and blue-winged teal, which had been more depleted during preceding years, have returned to the breeding grounds in greatly diminished numbers.

"Even under the best of conditions it will require several favorable breeding seasons and rigid regulations of the annual kill to enable the flocks to recover from their recent disaster.

No Other Alternative

"If the indicated degree of protection cannot be applied to these weakened species there will be no alternative under obligations imposd upon the department other than to place these birds on the closed season for such priods as may be necessary to insure their preservation.

"The effects of the two-month open season and also of the reduction in bag limits wil be closely observed during the present hunting season.

Other Speakers

Other speakers on Tuesday's program included Hoyes Lloyd, Supervisor of Wild Lift Protection of Canada; Talbott Denmead, of Baltimore, law enforcement officer of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, who told of the progress of black bass protection; Haskell Noyes, chairman of the Conservation Commission, Wiconsin, and State Game Warden E. Lee LeCompte, of Maryland.

Following the afternoon session the delegates were taken for an inspection of the State game farm at Gwynnbrook.
