The Barcarolle

By MARY SCHUMANN

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

SUSIE heard music coming from one of the apartments as she climbed the last flight with slow footsteps. She was late tonight and would barely have time to get ready for Bart who was going to take her to dinner.

The door of the apartment was imperceptibly open. Ardis must be home. She pushed open the door and the two people standing in the living room did not hear her; Bart with his arms around Ardis, kissing her cheek, murmuring something, Ardis clinging to him, smiling silkily.

Susie turned her back to them and began taking off her rubbers. When she faced them again Ardis was sitting in a chair and Bart was lighting a cigarette with studied nonchalance.

"Hello, everybody," said Susie with an innocent smile. She went into the bedroom and hung up her raincoat. Two-timing her, were they? Ardis was older, more clever . . . it wasn't fair!

Ardis came in. "Susie . . ." she stopped.

"Take him!" said Susie. "Go on out with him to dinner! I can't be bothered. I've a good book I'll enjoy more . . . I was getting fed up anyhow! Go on—scram!"

"Oh, don't be that way!" said Ardis petulantly. "It hadn't been going on—it just happened."

Susie shook her head. "Go on—I'm willing, I tell you!"

Susie cooked herself a chop on the two-burner gas plate, made some toast and coffee, and set it on a tray which she carried to a table beside the couch.

She heard the piano going across the hall. Some one was playing Wagner magnificently. Probably that young concert pianist who had moved in last week. The door of the apartment opposite was open and she could see the end of a grand piano, but not the player. He began playing the Barcarolle.

She seated herself on the steps of the stairway beside his door—very softly so he would not hear her. The music stopped while she was still in a dream.

She looked up. A young man with rumpled dark hair, dark eyes and a very kind face, was standing before her.

"If you're listening, perhaps you'd like to come in and sit in a comfortable chair while I play for you?"

"How did you know I was here?" asked Susie.

"I happened to look out and saw the edge of a dress and a pretty foot!"

He seated her on a cushioned chair facing the piano and pulled up a footstool for her. "Now, lovely child, sit there where I can look at you!"

"Susie Hill," said Susie smiling.

"Arthur MacFarland!" he replied. "The superintendent told me you lived across the hall . . . told me a little about you!"

"And he told me a pianist was moving in."

He sat down at the piano, waited a moment, then began playing something moving and beautiful from Brahms, most of the time his eyes on her face as if watching her mood. Presently he got up. "I never played that better," he declared. "Promise me you will listen to me again, Susie!"

He was better looking than Bart. So much better bred. Some one you could trust to be a good friend—he wouldn't let you down. Even Ardis with her dark flirtatious eyes—he would see through Ardis!

"I'll knock at your door sometime when you are playing, and if you want company, let me in." She got up to go. They stood there, lingering, smiling at each other.

"Susie, I haven't spoken fifty words to you, and known you only an hour, but I don't have to tell you—you must know it—that you are something rare and lovely?"

Some one was coming up the stairs, two at a time. As they came out of the door they were confronted by Bart, a Bart who was suddenly beefy and overgrown. "Susie," said Bart, "I want to explain what happened! I had to come back to see you!"

She introduced him to MacFarland but he barely touched the outstretched hand. Arthur MacFarland went into his room and shut the door.

"I'm awfully tired, Bart. Did you and Ardis have a good time?"

"We had a great row!—over you, of course!"

"That's too bad!"

"She had been making a play for me right along, and when I got in before you tonight—that—had just happened!"

"I see!" Susie was looking past him, seeing another face.

"I'm awfully sorry, Susie," he stammered.

"You don't need to be," she murmured. But when he wanted to go in her door she shook her head.

Bart stopped. His face took on a cynical look. "You were coming out of his apartment! . . . Perhaps you wanted to be alone tonight—were glad to have us go out—so you could be with him!"

A melody full of the flood of springtime, of bird song and high tender skies, magical music that called to every bit of soul and body, came from MacFarland's room.

Susie smiled sweetly. "Yes, Bart, that's exactly what I wanted! Good night . . . lots of luck!"

The Brown Creeper

The brown creeper is a methodical bird and one which covers the field of its endeavors with great detail. This bird, somewhat smaller than the English sparrow, is brown and gray on the back and upper parts, making it largely color protected when working a tree. It is an energetic feeder upon larvae and usually starts at the base of a tree and, spiraling around it, works its way up to the top, feeding upon all the larvae it can find en route.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

Wake Up Your Liver Bile —Without Calomel
And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go
If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.
For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.
If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.
It takes those good old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.
But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resist substitute. 25c at all stores. © 1931, C. M. Co.
