BY A WOMAN

We were with a friend a few days ago. He was telling us of buying the old peach box factory that used to be near the Chester River Wharf. He said that the lumber was perfectly good though it was over a hundred years old. He had used it to make stables for his horses, and had found the rafters spliced together instead of being nailed as they are at the present day.

Immediately our memories reverted to the time when peach box making was such an industry in the old town. When every small boy would try to get a job there. The boys would work beside the men, each trying to make as many as possible for they were paid by the piece, and the barefooted little fellows would come home happy with their days earnings. Of course there is no need for the factory now. As we went on in our walk my friend spoke of Scotch Point, another home of the colored aristocracy, where the women sat out in front of their neat homes attired in their stiffly starch dresses and aprons,

These same women played a great part in the comfort of the homes of the white people around, for they were good and faithful servants and the men, too, noted for their loyalty and faithfulness to the families that they served.

We went up to Cannon street and stopped before the site that was once occupied by the Worrell Tavern, where they placed a marker last summer. My friend told me that although in the seventies it had degenerated into a rooming house, yet it still bore some of the resemblance to the Inn that had the honor of entertaining Washington on his visited to Chestertown. Across the street we stopped at the home now owned by Mr. Theodore Jewell, but then it belonged to Miss Caroline Thompson, an old lady, who though blind enjoyed nothing better than telling of her reminisences they were most interesting.

Miss Caroline was ninety-nine, a stately old lady who was always dressed in stiff black silk and lace collar and they were most interesting.

She had the distinction in her early days of taking a long stage coach journey, visiting Philadelphia and even going as far as Saratoga, the most fashionable resort in those days. She heard a long funeral sermon preached for Gen. Washington who had recently died. A sad blow awaited Miss Caroline on her return home for her betrothed lover had fallen in love with her younger sister, so Miss Caroline remained a spinster to the end of her days, but she seemed always to reverence the memory of her one time lover, and brother in law. Miss Caroline would tell of the fine entertainment at the old Tavern. A gallary ran around the hall, where the musicians and the spectators sat and watched the lovely ladies and fine young bucks dance the minuet and the gavotte. Chestertown in those days was one of the few towns on the Eastern Shore that had a real tavern and it was the stopping place of many men who have become famous in history.

Queen street in the Seventies was divided into Robinson town, Queen St., Princess Street and Sheeptown. At the corner of Princess St., and High street was the Post Office which occupied a small portion of the store now run by Mr. Ben Heller. Mr. Collins was the Postmaster for some time. Chestertown is really one of the first towns to have a postoffice.

FASHIONS

Men make the fashions for the women, always trying to have the changes as great as posible, so that last season's styles will have to be changed in many ways.

This makes business brisker for every woman knows that the most observed person is not the chic modern clad women, but those who wear clothes that are very out of date; therefore they obey the mandates of fashion. Whether they wish to do so or not.

This year when womens pursers are lighter, Dame Fashions demands are greater than ever. Elaborate trimmings and expensive furs are worn in every way.

Will women still blindly obey or will she refuse to follow all the dictates of fashion?

Veils, Worn Short, Seen Everywhere

Turbans are cleverly draped this fall, and have a dashing youthful look. All hats are worn high at the back, disclosing a good bit of the hairline, and dip at least over one eyebrow. In sailor versions the telescope crown is one of the newer themes.

For more formal wear there are all sorts of little affairs exposing the hair not only at the side but between cross bands. These usually are worn with a short flaring veil, or sometimes with a maline halo brim.

The veil, folowing the slantwise line of the hat, is seen everywhere. It is always worn short, and is usually stifened a bit to make it stand out.

Enter The Topaz

Once more the topaz comes into its own, together with amber, canary diamonds and any other precious or semi-precious jewel that is yellow. The revival of yellow gems is, of course, due to the prevalence of deep brown among the autumn tones and perhaps to the gradual disappearance of yellow from among the fabrics.

London In Town

For town wear the London lady is adopting a suspender dress of black crepe de chine with a little puff-sleev-blouse in a bright color. The dress is accompanied by a little shoulder cape of the black crepe de chine, which ties in front and transforms the dress into a suit.

Fur Jackets A Success

The growing popularity of separate frocks and coats indicates that more fur coats than usual will be worn this Winter. A fur coat is certainly the dream of every woman, which fact insured the success of the new fur jackets that achieve a maximum of chic with a minimum of fur.

In The Housekeeper's Handy Book

An ice cream dipper is useful for moulding salads.

A dark-colored darning ball for light hose and a light one for dark hose saves the eyes.

Partitions of wallboard in the drawer of the kitchen table make it easy to keep knives and spoons separate.

Cup cakes baked with half a canned peach or other canned or preserved fruit in the center make delicious puddings.

Rubber plate-scrapers are useful to remove cake batter, whipped cream, salad dressing, melted chocolate and similar materials from mixing bowels.

When several eggs are to be cooked in the shell, it is convenient to lower thm into the boiling water in a sieve or wire basket, and lift them out in the same way when they are done.

Shy on Horses

Her car had broken down on the road opposite a field where a farmer was plowing with a four-horse team. The farmer came over and offered to pull the car to the nearest garage with his team.

"I appreciate your kind offer more than I can tell you," the lady in distress told the farmer, "but, unfortunately, you would need 12 more horses. You see, my car has a 16-horsepower motor." — Capper's Weekly.

Removed Bodily

He had gone into the manager's office to inquire if he could have the Saturday morning off for the purpose of digging up his garden.

"But my dear man," said the manager, "Smith told me only a day or two ago that you hadn't a garden."

"Well, then," was the reply, "someone must have taken it off the window sill."—Nebelspalter.

Adjustment

"Many believe we are due for a period of adjustment," said the solemn adviser.

"That is the way politics has always been," commented Senator Sorghum. "There has never been a time when one group of patriots wasn't trying to adjust another group out of office and themselves in."—Washington Star.

In Never-Never Land

It may be an old one, but Dr. Thomas B. Kelleher of Denver tells us of a weary youngster's retort to a nagging mother.

"Where," demanded the mother, "would you be if it weren't for me?"

"I don't know," wailed the child, "but I wish you were there."—Collier's Weekly.

Always Exceptions

"Some of the demonstrations following your speech were not entirely favorable."

"I was painfully aware of that fact," answered Senator Sorghum.

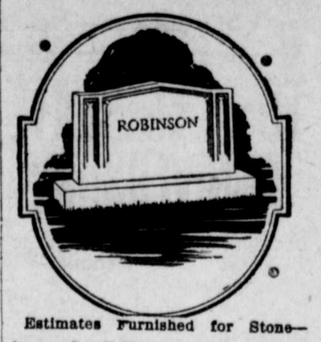

"However, you still have friends."

"Yes. Fortunately, you can't displease everybody."
