BY A WOMAN

My friends' mind was full with memories of places and people of the old town as we walked up our broad High street. She said that the busiest scene of all was at the Chester River Wharf where all the produce was hauled to be carried to Baltimore. That was before the time of the autos and trucks, and the quickest means of travel we had to Baltimore in those days. Judge Wickes dignified house and property remains the same except that the Judge's office has been taken away and thrown into the spacious garden. She remembered so well old Mr. Conyer who lived across the street. He and Mr. Bennett were the shoemakers of those days and strong shoes they made too. It was a trial to the young girls that their father's had these men to make their shoes of good calf-skin which lasted a long time, instead of buying the button gaiters in vogue at that time. Dr. Twilly lived in the house where the Louds now live. He had a coal yard as well as a dentist office and would come from one to the other on short notice. Dr. Twilley was noted for making fine false teeth, and many people from away would come back to have him make their new set. Anaesthetics being little used in those days, he would yank out the childrens teeth, giving them a soothing word or two as balm to their pain.

Miss Tempy Bradshaw lived next door to him, an old maid with her beautiful garden of flowers. She was a devoted Methodist and when she died she left to her church the fine property on which the M. E. Church now stands. But there is so much to tell of the change in the churches that they will be left to another chapter. In those days there was only one bank in the town, then called The First National Bank. It has since changed its name to The Chestertown Bank of Maryland and the fine building which they have recently built shows how peoples ideas have grown. Mr. Tom Hynson had a store in the building where Mrs. Cahall now resides while Mr. N. G. Westcott's occupied the present pool room of Mr. Bringman. The Citizens Bank now stands where Mr. Parks had a store and the Third National Bank has the site that Mr. Burton Burchinal had in those days. His store was once the home of Mr. Ricard where he raised his daughter, Miss Mollie Ricaud, who afterwards married Mr. William Walker and lived in the White House, but more of them shall follow later. The present Court House had been built, but right back of the old Colonial Church was a small brick building painted white, this was the jail. They must have had few prisoners in those days, or else they had crowded quarters. Afterwards the county bought the old grave yard belonging to the Episcopal Church. This grave yard was the sleeping place of many prominent people, but being in the heart of the town, it was thought more sanitary to remove the bodies to the cemetery outside of the township. Those, who had relatives and friends then living, were removed, but, most probably, many an unknown one is sleeping beneath the jail yard and the other buildings that now occupy that site. The Town Hall of those days was an old Armory which was used as a drilling place during the Civil War. It was there that the adults and children would gather to see and hear the plays and music. Underneath was the market where Mr. James Brice and Mr. Joe Usilton kept rival meat markets. Here the townspeople bought beef steak at 12 and 15 cents a pound.

This Hall stood in the present square which was a neglected weedy place, while in front of the Armory was buried in an upright position an old cannon which was used in the civil war. Opposite this space were the two Hotels of that day. Voshell House which was kept by Mr. Voshell and Hall's Hotel, which is now used as a rooming house and an antique shop.

HEALTH

There has been so much said of Pellegra recently that the following preventatives would be a good thing to know.

The cases that begin in the late spring and early summer are the result of prolonged use of an improper diet for six to ten months preceding the outbreak. Therefore what was done and particularly what was eaten during the winter of 1931-'32 is the cause of the pellagra that developed this summer. It is now in order to lay plans for a winter diet that will prevent pellagra during the next summer.

Drs. Wheeler and Sebrell tell us that if any one of the following foods, or group of foods makes up a fair proportion of the diet, pellagra will be prevented: Yeast, the germ of wheat, cereals, and breads made by grinding whole grains and leaving all of the germ in the meal or flour, fresh beef, canned corned beef, liver, canned salmon, canned haddock, tomatoes, turnip greens, canned English peas, milk and dried milk. (The preventive principle is in the milk rather than in the fat. Therefor for this purpose skim milk and curd are about as serviceable as whole milk, and more serviceable than butter and cream.)

The following foods are good pellagra preventives, but are not to be ranked with those given above: Dried beans and peas, eggs, canned spinach, green cabbage, canned string beans.

Other foods are being tested. The indications are that collards are preventive of pellagra. Mustard greens, turnips, other meats, and sweets are being tested.

The following foods have been proved to have little or no power to prevent pellagra: Cornmeal, wheat flour, rye flour, oatmeal, molasses, cane sirup, sweet potatoes, mature onions, carrots, rutabagas, salt pork, lard, cottonseed oil, butter and gelatin.

LA MODE

Variety is Shown In Autumn Hats

In hat shops the following ideas dominate: Sailor themes in brimmed hats. Double beret drapes, newest expression of this theme in French hats. Double trimmings at back, twin bows or ornaments.

The satin sailor, a new idea, strictly Victorian. The drum silhouette in fur. Soleils increase in favor, both surfaces featured.

The jeweler's touch—glistening ornaments make a point of elegance. An effective evening cap is composed of bands of black broadcloth showing the hair between, with a crest of black feathers across the top from ear to ear.

Belts

Quite the most important feature of many of the new dresses is the belt. We have certainly gone a long way from the low waistline or no waistline at all to the tightly high belted effect, which is the leading vogue of the hour.

Even the evening gowns have belts pulled as tightly as possible about the waist. Of course, if the waist is large and the figure not up to standard the woman with discrimination will cling to her beltless or at least not so consciously belted style.

Variety in Color And Fabrics Shown

Shop windows display great variety in color and fabric in presentations of dresses, with several stores, however, faithful to the black and white scheme for formal wear.

For daytime wear, there is interesting attention shown gray, navy is effective, and rd and black is striking in combination. Many exclusive stores approve green with gray, and red with brown, and a lovely royal sapphire is observed in evening fashions.

RECIPES

Cream Scones

2 Cupfuls Flour
3 Teaspoonsfuls Baking Powder.
1-2 Teaspoonful Salt.
3 Tablespoonfuls Shortening.
2 Eggs.
1-2 Cupful Light Cream.
2 Tablespoonfuls Sugar.

Mix and sift the dry ingredients and cut in the shortening until well blended. Add the beaten eggs to the cream, and then mix to a dough with the dry ingredients. Do not knead, but pat out as you would biscuits. Cut in triangles or diamonds. Place in a greased pan, brush with milk, sprinkle with sugar, and bbake in a hot oven (400 degrees F.).

A tea bread that is different is the Queen Biscuit. They are better served hot, and the ingredients should be prepared beforehand. The combining time is very short if the shortening is allowed to soften. Grease and flour the pans and have the oven ready. The recipe comes from England.

Delicate Gingerbread

1 1-2 Cupfuls Flour.
1-2 Teaspoonful Ginger.
1-2 Teaspoonful Cinnamon.
1 Teaspoonful Soda.
1-4 Teaspoonful Cloves.
1 Egg.
3-4 Cupful Molasses.
1-2 Cupful Shortening.
1-2 Cupful Boiling Water.

Sift together the flour, cinnamon, ginger, soda, and cloves. Pour the boiling water over the shortening, stir until melted, and then add to the egg-and-molasses mixture. Beat well and add to the flour and spices. Beat again until thoroughly blended, and pour into tiny greased muffin pans. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.). Serve hot. This amount makes 36 muffins.

Date Nut Loaf

1-2 Cupful Sugar.
2 Eggs.
1-2 Cupful Flour.
3-4 Teaspoonful Baking Powder.
1 Package Dates.
1-2 Pound English Walnuts.

Beat the egg yolks, add the sugar, and mix thoroughly. Sift the baking powder and flour together, sift a little of this over the fruit, and add the remainder to the mixture. Stir in the fruit, and fold in the well-beaten egg whites last. Pour into a greased loaf pan measuring 8 by 4 inches at the bottom and 3 inches deep, and bake for one hour in a modern oven (350 degress F.) Do not attempt to slice the loaf until it has stood in a covered pan overnight.

SQUAWK FROM AUCTION BLOCK

A gold digger had died and all her wordly possessions, including a parrot, were being auctioned off. "What am I offered for this beautiful bird?" said the auctioneer.

"One bean," bid a bystander.

"Two bucks," roared another.

"Make it five, Daddy," croaked the parrot, "an' I'll give you a kiss."

It's Lonely in Borneo

By ALICE DUANE

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. (WNU Service)

SIGNS of spring may lightly turn a young man's fancy to thoughts of love, but not so surely as do thoughts of a good job. At least so it was with Brander Yates. He had been out of work for six months. He had spent what savings he had not previously lost and was down to his last ten dollars when out of the blue, as it were, appeared a perfectly good job. Not only a job but a year's contract. Perhaps the contract wasn't so much of a miracle as it sounded, because the job was off in Borneo. Now for six weeks he would work in the home office, then set sail to the field of his new work. On Friday, just a week hence, he would receive a pay envelope. He ought to be able to manage until then on what he had left.

Having no money to spend on theater tickets, flowers and taxis he had of necessity assumed the semblance of a woman hater. He had got along without the froth of feminine society that long and he meant to continue to do so.

He might have continued to do so had not the personnel man of the new concern asked him whether he was married. In case he was the company would pay transportation for the wife as well as for himself. Brander kept thinking of that. After all Borneo was a terrible distance away and a fellow might get a little lonely.

At six o'clock Saturday afternoon—the Saturday before the Monday his job began—Brander Yates pressed the button on the front apartment of a nice but unpretentious apartment house where in former days he had been wont to spend an occasional Saturday afternoon or week day evening. Under one arm he carried a long and bulky paper roll from the ends of which protruded the heads of some rather faded gladioli. The door of the apartment was opened for him, but instead of Daphne in the dark frame of the doorway stood a girl whom he did not at first recognize.

He looked again and thought rapidly.

"Oh, it's you Joan," he said. "Take these weeds before I drop them—and the magazines if they are any good to you." Then he looked at the little brown-eyed girl whose name he had nearly forgotten. "Gee, but it's good to see you."

"It's surely good to see you, Mr. Yates," she said. "And isn't it great how you found out where I was? I've only been here a week and I've often thought of you since you left Bradley's."

Brander told Joan that a small young bird had told him how to find her and she helped out the bird by explaining that Daphne had gone away and that as the lease did not run out until October she had let Joan have the apartment at a reduction. Joan had no lease, so it was a simple transaction. "And then after the first of October I don't know where I shall go," Joan explained to Brander, and Brander beamed at Joan, reflecting that the first of October was when he would be sailing for Borneo. Rare coincidence! He didn't even flinch when Joan mentioned that Daphne was to be married.

Joan gave Brander cool drinks and then insistently set a little table to share a bit of supper with him. Brander went into the kitchenette later to scan the only clock. It was necessary for him to catch the nine o'clock train for the beach—nine o'clock being the last train that way. He couldn't spend the night in town because he had already spent nearly his last dollar for flowers and magazines.

At twenty minutes to nine he started to leave and then Joan explained that she was very sorry but the clock was twenty minutes slow.

So Joan and Brander went out on Joan's small balcony and Tom told her his plans—told her also that he would now have to sleep in the park. He had planned to commute from his sister's cottage at the beach the next week and right now he hadn't enough for a hotel.

Pretty nice girl, Joan turned out to be—and all those months he had known her at Bradley's he had never realized it. Joan put a five dollar bill into one of Brander's hands and the handle of a small but empty overnight bag into the other and told him to go to a nearby hotel.

Brander appeared promptly at nine the next morning at Joan's.

After breakfast they washed the dishes, took a leisurely walk, sat on a park bench, ate luncheon at Joan's together, and talked and talked, until somehow Brander asked Joan whether she could endure the idea of going to Borneo, and Joan—another rare coincident—said that all her life she had just yearned and longed and pined to go to Borneo. Brander was marveling at the lovely lights that glistened in Joan's eyes and at the musical quality of her voice. It would be easy to ask her now, but after all he thought he ought to make explanations, about the flowers.

"I knew they were for Daphne," Joan told him.

Joan lowered her lovely brown eyes. "I turned the clock slow when you weren't looking last night. I wanted you to come back."

"And you don't mind about the flowers?" Brander asked.

"No," said Joan. "Times are hard and a girl can't expect too much and—besides, Brander, I've always wanted to go to Borneo."

Red Cross to Enlist Great Army of Members to Fight Distress

Last year 4,004,459 men and women joined the American Red Cross as members during the annual roll call, Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day. A peace-time army even greater than this will be needed in 1932-33 to support and carry on the nationwide relief work of the Red Cross. There are 3,639 Red Cross Chapters and they have 10,000 branches.

All Are "Jugulars"

Children in the vicinity of Forty-ninth street and Wentworth avenue were playing croquet.

One boy stood apart from the group and deftly kept three of the wooden balls in the air. The game was forgotten as admiring youngsters crowded about the young juggler.

"Say, you really know how to do that," one of the group remarked, with open mouth. "How did you learn to do it?"

"Oh, I guess I just inherited it," the boy said, still keeping the three balls in the air, "there's a jugular vein in every member of my family."—Indianapolis News.
