THE SOUTH IS TURKEY COUNTRY

MRS. BAKER PLAYS PROMINENT PART IN DEVELOPING INDUSTRY

The following article, taken from the November issue of the Southern Planter, shows the prominent part Mrs. Helen M. Baker has plaged in developing the turkey industry in all parts of the country. Mrs. Baker came to Kent county without any knowledge of farming or turkey raising. She studied the methods then being used, figured out a cure for the weak points and exploded many of the theories that had been in practice for years.

The article follows:

Southern Planter land is the turkey capital of the Southern States east of the Mississippi River. Leaving oot of consideration Texas, the five States in The Southern Planter territory produce more than one-half, to be exact, 54 per cet, of all the turkeys raised in the South. Virginia ranks first with 528,000 turkeys, Kentucky second with 383,000, Maryland third with 279,000, and North Carolina fourth with 205,000 as shown in the accompanying table.

Turkeys on farms in 1929 in the Southern States

STATE
Delaware	60,714
Maryland	278,579
North Carolina	205,300
Virginia	527,715
West Virginia	182,522
The Southern Planter territory	1,254,830
Arkansas	55,635
Alabama	142,894
Florida	68,689
Georgia	85,731
Kentucky	383,138
Louisiana	27,430
Mississippi	85,010
South Carolina	80,235
Tennessee	156,470
Texas	3,782,912
Total for last 10 States	4,868,144
Texas excluded	1,085,232

This rank of our territory in the turkey kingdom is of special interest now with Thanksgiving Day so near at hand. On November 24, the turkey, brown, steaming and stuffed, will be the monarch of the feasting board. This, it has been each Thanksgiving since the celebration was started by the Pilgrim Fathers in 1621. They selected turkey, doubtless, because it was plentiful in the wild state and could be had with but little trouble.

American Bird

Contrary to the belief of many people, the turkey is an American bird. It probably was on hand to greet the Norseman, Columbus in 1492, and the other early visitors to the American continent. When the Atlantic Seaboard was settled, turkeys roamed the woods from Maine to Florida. It is the theory that our present domesticated turkey is the result of interbreeding and subsequent improvement of four types of wild turkeys—those that ranged from Maine to Florida, the Mexican variety, the type in the Southern United States, and those of southern Florida.

Although native to America, turkeys frequently reached our shores from Europe—but not from Turkey as is so commonly supposed. The Spanish carried Mexican turkeys to Spain. The Jewish merchants there, thinking they belonged to the peacock family, gave them the Yiddish name for peacock—tukki. Tradition states this is how the name turkey originated. Another tradition is the name is based on the sound the imaginative person might reproduce in hearing the words —"turk, turk, turkey."

Enigma Is Discovered

Regardless of how the name originated, or to what country the birds are native, or when domestication took place—it isn't exaggerating to say that more progress has been made in turkey raising during the past twelve years than during all the centuries prior thereto.

During the past decade it has been discovered why it is not necessary for four-fifths of the young turkeys to die from disease. Death from disease in well managed flocks is now the exception and not the rule. Flocks of ten to twelve birds have given way to those of from 100 to 1,000 or more.

The hidden secret in turkey raising was revealed when the cause of the dread blackhead disease was discovered. It was found that turkeys and chickens could not be kept together, nor turkeys allowed to roam where chickens had been. It was learned that chickens, although not learned thereby, often caried the germ causing blackhead in turkeys. The two must be kept apart. Incidently, this is not a one-sided game. It has been discovered, also, that turkeys are sometimes carriers of the germ of the gape worm of chickens, and are not themselves usually attacked.

Back in 1920, Mrs. Helen M. Baker, Kent county, Maryland, started raising turkeys in small fields removed from chickens. She learned it was not necessary to let the birds range the farm as she had been told. She, also, found that the young turkeys needed an abundance of feed—not in sparing amounts as her neighbors advised her. She departed from the ways of generations of unsuccessful turkey production and found success—by keeping turkeys removed from chickens and feeding the poults all they would eat. A few years later, Dr. E. E. Tyzzer of Harvard University, discovered why turkeys and chickens would not thrive together—the part each played in the transmission of blackhead disease.

Thus the enigma of turkey production is known. The business need no longer be uncertain.

More Improvements Follow

Improvements continue. Feeding is being placed on a sound basis. Scientifically prepared mashes and scratch feds for practical turkey raisers are now available. The importance of artifficial incubation and brooding is becoming more fully appreciated. Breeding for better type and higher egg production over a short period is being following by leading breeders. Egg production also is being increased by feeding laying mashes before and during the laying periods.

Market demands are receiving more attention through proper fattening, dressing and handling. The greatest demand is for relatively small birds —hens that will weigh from 9 to 10 pounds, and toms from 12 to 16. They, however, must be well fattened, plump, straight breasted and have a minimum of pin feathers. Movements are on foot to supply orders for less than whole turkeys. The time will come when the consumer will be able to purchase cuts of turkey just as cuts of lamb are purchased. Broilers, young turkeys weighing from 5 to 7 pounds, are new additions on the turkey market.

Turkeys Year Round

The turkey's supremacy is no longer limited to the Thanksgiving feast. He, also, is taking the leading role at the Christmas dinner. Approximately one-half of the turkeys sold by farmers in our territory are marketed at Thanksgiving and one-half at Chistmas. The tendency, however, is now for the demand to start in early November and to continue past the New Year. This serves to bolster holiday prices. It is only a matter of time until the turkey will be a fowl served upon the tables of our people the year round.

The Curbstone Diplomat

BY WILLIAM S. COLLINS

Almost every city in this, "The Land of The Free and The Home of the Brave," is passing the hat to help the unemployed. Says one corporation shave to another, "Give until it hurts, your contribution is needed so that none shall suffer. The need is desperate. Upon your gift may hang hunger or happiness cold or comfort, despair or decency."

When they first started passing the hat, the goals were reached. Now, the hat has been passed so many times, it looks as though the amount of dough needed can hardly be collected. The pitcher has been to the well once to often.

The man to be collected from has taken a big cut in pay, or a man in business finds his income, like his cheap shirt, has taken a shrink. They are now unable to contribute as much as formerly and the relief drives are falling short. What can be done now?

It is a sad state of affairs, but it is amusing to hear the city people talk about the back to the farm movement. When big business was gobbling up little business, everyone was prosperous living off the fat of the big fellow. But, now Mr. Big Corporation has practically eaten up little business. It looks as though there is nothing left to consolidate or merge. Yes, they are through with the man they enticed to the big city. They wanted him while he was of value but now that his nourishment is gone, send him back to the sanitified air of the country. "Let the farmers take care of them" is the cry. Yeah; like the slave-owner that wanted to free the old slave that was too old to work. The slave, however, told him, "Massa you are the meat, now you got to pick the bones."

Probably before the winter is over, we countrymen will have our own relief problem to tackle. We understand some children here in Kent do not attend school nw as they have not sufficient clothing and that the truant officer is making efforts to collect clothes for these poor children.

This country raises more food and raw material for making clothes than it can consume. Some crops are not even harvested. It seems that some plan could be worked out so no one would be without sufficient food, clothes or shelter.

When you get what you want, you don't want it. That is likely to be the case with the "We Want Beer Crowd." It looks like the government is merely intending to put a tax on and raise the price of near beer. We never have been without beer; that is, we have always had homebrew. Beer, I mean homebrew, is untaxed and a lot of it is seven or eight per cent alcohol. One bottle and you are ready to hunt bears with a buggy whip. This one, two or three per cent beer will not answer the purpose for the present day suds hoisters. A proposition that the homebrew makers are up against, is how to mkae beer without having the yeast collect in the bottom of the bottle. Somebody come to the rescue.

What method will be used to dispense real whisky when it comes back? If real stuff can be had again, it is reasonable to believe that the present day "branch water" will be a thing of the past. It is a shame for the Eastern Shore to lose such a profitable industry.

Wild Stuff. Many people are working hard every day in the year and at present many are not working at all. If labor saving inventions continue, it is reasonable to believe that many more will be out of work. Distribute this work and it would only be necessay for a man to work two or three days a week. The est of the time could be spent in amusement. But (?) where do the "wimin" come in. I bet the men would have to help wash the dishes or attend to the children during their vacations.

It has been an old American custom, to put a plug coin, or blow in the chewing gum machine, to get a stick of gum, and cheat the machine out of the penny. It is reported, that somebody last week was not content to cheat a mechanical clerk out of one stick of gum, so he took the whole works; gum, money and machine from a shop on Cross street.

KILLED WHEN HIT BY CAR

LOCAL MAN HITS CARRIAGE WITHOUT LIGHTS

An automobile, driven by W. Daniel McKee, crashed into a carriage on the road from Sudlersville to Hartley on Sunday night of this week. The occupant of the carriage was Mr. John Michael Walla, a Czecho-Slovakian, 48 years old, who two days before had become a citizen of the United States. Mr. Walla was thrown out on the concrete road and sustained a fractured skull. He died while being taken to the Kent Genral Hospital. The horse was badly injured and the carriage wrecked.

Mr. McKee, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. William H. McKee, of Chestertown, is in the employ of the Gulf Refining Company in Delaware. He was exonerated of all blame for the accident as it was stated that the carriage was traveling without lights. The dead man is survied by a widow and six children.

DECREASE IN AUTOMOBILE FATALITIES

A remarkable decrease in the number of fatal accidents this month is one of the things the people of Maryland have to be thankful for, according to E. Austin Boughman, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles.

"Last year, from the first of November until Thanksgiving, forty-five persons were killed in motor vehicle accidents," the commissioner explained, "This year, during the same period, there have been only nineteen deaths.

"The fact that twenty-six persons have been saved from an untimely snuffing-out seems to me something for which to offer hearty thanks.

"Marylanders can be justly proud of this reduction. It is an indication that they are placiug greater value on life, and are exerting greater effort to preserve it.

"Therefor, I am asking the people of the State who are thankful to be alive to cooperate in the Save-A-Life Campaign. They will do themselves and their fellow-citizens a valuable service if they will have their cars inspected at once, or urge dilatory friends to do the same. Only a few more days remain to comply with the compulsory inspection law."
