NOW AND THEN

NOW AND THEN

BLACK BOUGHS

I love dark twigs that etch upon the dawn
A knotted lace, a twisted fantasy,
That tangle branches where a gnome on faun
Hid amber honey in a hollow tree.
High where the winter howls and squirrels cling,
And chickadees are jeering at the snow,
Are woven black and silver boughs that fling
Sharp icicles into the world below.

Old clumps of brambles tangled in the lane
Have thorns more keen than knives, yet on the sky
They write a poem in their fantastic scroll;
Their frosty patterns dull the window pane,
And trace old ballads where the storm clouds fly.
The leafless boughs have framed it in my soul.

DIANA KEARNY POWELL.

The trees that a short time ago were clothed in scarlet and gold, are now lifting their bare limbs to the sky as if appealing for help. And yet the wintry landscape is very beautiful too. Some have said they like the trees better so. Just a few days ago I saw a blot of red, and on looking closer found it to be a cardinal. Just like our depression plant which is so bright now, it churtles, "Don't worry! Don't worry!"

Washington is becoming a veritable shrine for Shakespeare lovers. The pure white marble building which Folger has erected to his memory, has many of his old plays and manuscripts. In fact, any thing that can be obtained concerning the poet is collected there, if it can be obtained. His picture, hanging, near the entrance, is a speaking one, and altogether the spectator feels that time has rolled back and he is living in the century that Shakespeare lived.

A Justice of the Peace imitated Soloman in his judgement of a case the other day. Two women, neighbors, both claimed a hen, and the Judge listened to the tale of each. Then taking the hen, which had been brought to court, he went to the street where the Claiments lived and turned the hen loose. She went promptly to one of the homes, so the judge decided in that way which was the owner. Many people, knowing the vagaries of a hen, would hardly think this a fair test.

FARM MARKET AT VOSHELL HOUSE

Beginning Saturday, December 17, and until further notice the Kent County Farm and Home Market will be held in the store space on High street, beneath the Voshell House, which was formerly occupied by Stafford. This space has been generously offered to the market by Mr. Robert Moffett for use until rented.

Last Saturday the ladies marketed in the open in spite of a snow storm and cold winds. They are most grateful for the shelter now being provided.

The Market has had the advantage of a strategic position in front of the Eliason Building through the cooperation of Mr. Thomas W. Eliason who graciously gave permission for the setting up of tables and carrying on of the Saturday market under the porch of his building where the acticles for sale were kept dry under all weather conditions.

The Farm and Home Market people are very appreciative of the fine cooperation they have received in Chestertown and through this movement considerably more money has been in circulation since most of that taken in on Saturday's goes back into Chestertown business houses before the end of the day.

One lady used a good part of the money she received in the sale of a turkey to buy beef since her family were fed up on poultry and pork which is just one incident of shopping that comes directly out of market sales.

TURKEY SHOW JANUARY 25

TURKEY GROWERS ASSOCIATION CHANGES NAME

By unanimous vote at the meeting of the Maryland Turkey Growers Association of Kent County held last Friday, the words "of Kent County" were dropped from the name of the Association for several reasons. The name as it now stands is more convenient, is less likely to be misquoted and gives the work a wider scope as carried on by the Association and the annual turkey show which was first held last year.

In connection with this year's show a banquet will be held on the evening of January 25, the first night of the two-day Show, at the dining rooms of the M. E. Church and will be served by the Bykota Club. A fine turkey dinner menu was submitted to and accepted by the Turkey Growers at the Friday meeting. Tickets will be on sale early.

The Show itself will be held in the Armory where the local Association will also be host to the Southeastern District of the White Holland Club. The White Holland birds shown last year attracted a great deal of attention and admiration.

The judge for the show will be W. H. Rice with John H. Moffett, formerly of Kent County now of Pioneer Point Farm in Queen Anne's County, as clerk.

Not a great amount of buying of market turkeys has taken place as yet for the Christmas season and prices remain about on the Thanksgiving level for this year. Less cold storage birds than usual at this time are reported which gives a hopeful note for the Christmas and later markets of 1932 and 1933.

POSTOFFICE OFFICIAL HERE

INSPECTS SITES FOR NEW POST OFFICE

Mr. Dauch, representing the Treasury and Post Office Departments of the United States government, was in Chestertown on Thursday of this week for th purpose of inspecting sites for the new post office and interviewing local citizens.

A gathering of local men met with Mr. Dauch Thursday afternoon at the Chamber of Commerce offices at which time he named the various sites offered and the specifications for the site.

The location desired is a corner lot 160 ft.x160 ft. The usual building specifications are a building 80 feet square with 30 feet of land on the rear for expansion. Beyond this it is desired to have land space of 40 feet on each side except the side or sides bordering on the street.

The original appropriation for the new Chestertown Post office was $75,000 but the economy act reduced this to $67,500. It is apparently the desire of the department to secure the site for approximately $9,000 and spend $58,500 for the building.

The reason for the 40 ft. land space around the building is for light and fire protection as the government does not carry insurance.

The sites that has been offered, together with the size and price follows: Bibbs Inn, property 125 ft.x125 ft.x108 ft. $15,000. Noland property 49 ft.x 297 ft.. $25,000. Rockwell property 139 ft.x70 ft.x20 ft. no price stated. Satterfield property, 151 ft.x165 ft. $25,000. Orem proeprty; 90 ft.x125 ft., no price stated.

It was stated at the meeting that the center of the business section is the corner of Cross and High streets, while the center of population is at the Voshel Hotel.

Mr. Dauch stated that any additional sites would be considered up until the time of the actual purchase.

WM. RADCLIFFE A VAGRANT

Sheriff John T. Vickers took William Radcliffe, local white man, to the House of Correction on Friday of this week where he has been sentenced on a charge of vagrancy. Radcliffe was born in England and has lived in Kent county for many years. Several weeks ago he was taken to the Easton hospital where his condition was said to be caused by poison liquor, and since that time his habits have prevented him from making a living. His livelihood for many years has been derived by doing odd jobs around town.
