BAY BRIDGE

When I begin to build it, I will take a song and dream
And start them on a journey that will land them high and dry
On the other side of beauty, far across the mighty stream,
Where the fields of Kent are happy and the Talbot orchards lie.

I won't need any money, nor the State,
to help me go;
I'll just put on a magic sort of memory with a glow;
I'll stretch my wings of fancy and with love that space I'll span
To the red clay hills of Cecil and the Harford patteran.

I build a bridge each moment far across the Chesapeake,
I build one every minute of each unit
of the week—
A bridge that soars resplendent in the sparkle and the shine
Of the sun that beats so loving on this Maryland of mine. —B. B.

STRIKING DAIRY FACTS REVEALED

FACTS DO NOT AGREE WITH GENERAL PRACTICE

Analysis of the records kept on the dairy herds of the members of the Kent Dairy Herd Improvement Association furnish unbiased information on dairy practices. In these days of falling milk prices, it is more important than ever that attention be given to economy of production if any profit is to result. What do the records show? They show that the well fed cow is the economical producer of milk. Many dairymen think they are practicing economy by cutting down on the feed of their cows, but continue to keep all their cows. Half feeding cuts down the volume of milk, cuts down the income and increases the cost per cwt. of the milk produced. The records indicate that real economy of production can come only through the removal of cows of low production ability and feeding well the cows able to respond to feed by producing milk more cheaply than can be done by half-fed cows. There is a real danger, however, in the suggestions offered. If farmers were to full-feed their herds and continue to hold all their cows, there would be one definite result—lower prices for all mik, which condition no producer desires to bring about. All dairymen should realize that in spite of lowered consumption due to reduced buying power, there are more cows now in milk than in previous years; even in '29 the last of the boom years. With more cows in milk and with lessened consumption of milk, it is easy to realize that prices can easily be forced downward. To the thinking dairymen then the records suggest the removal of low producing cows but feeding well the cows able to respond to feed. Such cows only are the ones which can return profit under present condition.

Best Paint For Pruning Cuts And Tree Wounds

Tests made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Yale University, and the Bartlett Tree Research Laboratories on nearly 100 different paints for the treatment of pruning cuts and tree wounds indicate that the most satisfactory paint is a mixture of equal parts of linseed oil and commercial, dry Bordeaux Mixture.

Rats Controlled By Red Squill

Rats are wasters as well as consumers of food and feed. They do much damage if uncontroled. Fortunately a slow acting poison, which is harmless to other classes of livestock, pets, and poultry is available at relatively low cost. This material is called "Red Squill." It may be bought separately for those who desire to do their own mixing or it may be bought ready mixed. Price varies with quantity used. There are therefore two reasons for united or community effort in rat eradication, lessened cost and increased efficiency, the latter being due to the tendency of rats to migrate. They will spread to your place from a neighbor's unless all are treated simultaneously.

The Extension service has information as to the purchase, mixing and use of Red Squill powder. Details given on request.
