OLD CHESTERTOWN AND VICINITY

Some historians contend that Peale's birthplace was near Queenstown, but even, if such is the case his father moved to Chestertown soon after his birth, and his brother Rembrandt, also a famous painter, was born here. The old house in which the Peale's lived has been torned down. This is a blot on the patrotic spirit of Chestertown. Had it been standing during the Bi-Centenial of last summer the citizens of the town would have preserved it. "Another of this old town's distinctions is given as the birth place of two early American Naval officers, James and Samuel Nicholson. James Nicholson was made Commander in Chief when our navy was organized in 1777, and before, and after had a distinguished career in command of fighting ships at sea. His brother, Samuel was a lieutenant under John Paul Jones, and participated in the battle between the Bon Homme Richard, and the Serapis, and later superintended the construction of the Constitution and the Constellation.

After the Revolutionary war everything that bore an English name was very unpopular.

There is an amusing story of an ardent member of the Virginia Assembly who became eloquent on the subject of erasing all English or royal names and he refused to listen to any arguments to the contrary, until one of the members arose and challenged him to mortal combat for he stated that if he insisted that he would thus be deprived of his name. The Challenger explained that his name was "Mr. King."

"It is evident that the very name of English Church would be unpopular so" in a sense Chestertown is the cradle of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In its old Emmanuel church at the heart of the town there was in 1780, a convention or representatives of the Church of England in America, who felt that "of England" should no longer attach to a church or to its name in independent America. At this assembly, on motion of the Reverend James Jones Wilmer, of Tide Water, Md., it was decided to adopt the name Protestant Episcopal Church, by which it continues to be known.

After the Revolution, it was less agreeable for the Eastern Shore families to send their sons to Cambridge, Oxford, or any other English schools, than before the war with England. It was then that the old Kent County School here in Chestertown was raised to the rank of college, and with the consent of Gen. Washington, named Washington College, the first College named after him and, it is believed, the only one so named by his express consent. The General led the subscribers to the new college.

In 1789 the college conferred on Washington the degree of Doctor of Laws which the President acknowledged with a formal letter.

Washington had indeed passed through Maryland the previous May when he went to New York to put young Custis in Kings College now Columbia, in the city of New York. That young gentleman's lack of application to his studies, and "his propensity to the sex" gave his step father no end of concern at this time, and caused Washington to a little despairingly say he "could govern men but not boys." He had a few years ago troubled his mentor, Mr. Boucher, in whose house he was, and also his step father, by some attentions which he paid to a daughter of Mr. Galloway, of Tulip Hill. Young Custis early in 1773 fell in love with Eleanor the daughter of Benedict Calvert, of Mount Airy. Washington believed him as yet too young to think of Matrimony, and so posted him out of Maryland to Kings College in distant New York where he believed he would forget his youthful attachment. However, it appears from his diary that he permitted the young man a chance to see his sweetheart on his way to New York.

We also read from his diary. After Breakfast, and abt 8 o'clock, set ont for Rock Hall, where we arrived in two hours and 25 minutes. Dind on Board of the Annapolis at Chestertown and supped and lodged at Ringgold's near Chestertown.

FASHIONS

Men's Morning Coats Now Worn By Women

Following the advent of "hard-boiled" shirts for women in Paris has appeared evening coats which are like men's morning coats. They are of black cloth lined with black satin, and might be borrowed from the wearer's husband or brothers.

New Trends In Fabrics

Since the silhouette of the new coats is practically unchanged, great stress is laid on smart and unusual weaves in fabrics to give distinction to your new coat.

Fabrics divide themselves into the soft and hard weaves. In the former group are all manner of crepy wools, some very fine, others in blistered and matelasse weaves, for dress coats.

NEW COLORED SHOES

Bit Of Bright Color

A touch of bright red or green is cleverly introduced to give a not-too-startling effect on some of the newest shoes. The tricolor theme is carried out in the opera pump chosen for sketching, which is in a dark beige kid, with effective trimming of blac patent leather, and a slendre piping of bright red.

Navy shoes are by no means out of the picture. But this year they are oftenest seen in combination with trimmings of gray or beige, just as the all-navy costume has given place to the one with contrasting touches.

Separate Fur Scarfs

Since many of the new suits and coats are made without fur, we shall see many separate fur scarfs this season. These vary from the very inexpensive cravat scarfs of flat fur, such as galyak, which are only correct with tailored clothes to the more elaborate scarfs of two or three skins of baum marten, sable or mink.

This type can be worn with clothes of all types, and is always flattering There are some very new-looking fox scarfs, little collars, or skins made up without heads or tailys, and thrust through a ring for a fastening when worn close around the throat. These are very smart with jacket suits and coats.

The Road To Better Health

COUGHS

BY DR. WILLIAM J. SCHOLES

Quite often the victim of a more or less frequent dry cough tells how he or she has done everything that is usually advised for a "cold," but without relief. The favorite "sure cures" of neighbors and friends have failed to cure.

Now it is possible to have more than one cold during the season for colds. And anyone who develops a bronchitis is rather certain to cough. The ordinary attack of bronchitis, however, is somewhat self-limited. At first the cough is dry, perhaps painful. Later, as the course of the bronchitis tends to recovery, the cough becomes loose, or "productive," as it is called. The loose cough serves a useful purpose in removing material from the air-passages.

But it does not necessarily follow that everyone who coughs has a bronchitis, either acute or chronic. Nor does a cough that is more or less persistent, necessarily mean tuberculosis. For there are several causes of the symptom of cough aside from affections of the organs of respiration.

Varied Causes

Irritation due to the inhalation of dust, smoke and irritating vapors may cause cough. Constant exposure to any of these may cause a chronic cough.

Cough may be a symptom in certain forms of heart disease. In such cases, the heart lacks the power to properly pump the blood. Blood is dammed back into the lungs, causing a congestion. The resulting irritation causes an impulse to cough.

Another possible cause of coughing is irritation in the ear. The resulting cough may be severe and persistent. Other possible causes could be mentioned. But these will serve to illustrate the futility of attempting to treat all coughs as though they were caused by "colds."

It is probably true that most coughs are the result of affections of the organs of respiration. The point is that these are not the only possible causes. It is obvious that treatment for a cold, aside from the rest which is usually advised, will not greatly benefit a weak heart. Nor is such treatment likely to bring permanent relief when a cough is caused by some irritation in the ear.

Hints for the Household

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Tea Wagons

Save your steps. What's in a name? A tea wagon is, of course, useful for the service it is made for. But why not make it more useful? Here are few added uses for your tea cart.

1. Use cart to carry things to and from kitchen in preparing a meal.
2. When washing windows on inside, place necessities on tea cart and wheel from window to window.
3. Use it for a mending table. Stack clothes on tea wagon that need mending after the weekly washing has been assorted. Wheel in room or onto porch or to any convenient spot in which to mend.
4. The work of cleaning days can be lightened by using tea cart to hold supplies.

COOKING HINTS

Peanut and Cabbage Salad

This is a dandy winter salad:
2 cups of shredded cabbage.
1 small green pepper (cut up).
1 cup of chopped peanuts.
Mix lightly. Blend with French dressing.

Tomato Aspic Jelly

1 envelope of gelatin.
1-2 cup of cold water.
3 1-2 cups of canned tomatoes.
Little onion.
Little celery.
Little cloves.
Little salt.
Few grains of cayenne.
2 tablespoons of vinegar.

Method: Soak gelatin in cold water a few minutes. Mix all other ingredients except vinegar. Boil 15 minutes. Add vinegar and dissolved gelatin.

Turn into large mold or individual molds. Serve on lettuce leaves. Garnish with egg and green pepper.

BAKING HINTS

Butterscotch Apples

Core desired number of apples. Fill each cavity with brown sugar. Place a piece of butter on top of each apple. Place apple in baking pan. Suround apples with water to 1-2 inch depth. Add more sugar in water to make a syrup. Bake in moderate oven. Serve either plain or with whipped cream.

Baked Onions

Method: Peel onions or par-boil in slightly salted water. Pour off water. Place onions in a buttered baking dish. Bake until tender. Baste occasionally with melted butter and hot water.

READ THE LABEL

AVOID COSTLY MISTAKES

When Mrs. Brown—that is not her real name, but it will answer the purpose—had her gasses changed a few weeks ago, her oculist gave her a prescription for some eye drops to be used just before going to bed. She had the prescription filled and tucked the bottle away in her medicine chest. When she was ready for bed, she took out what she thought was the right bottle—she did not bother to read he label—and dropped two or three drops—not of the eye medicine—as she supposed, but of a lotion containing a dilute solution of carbolic acid and glycerine, in her eye' Fortunately, she had plenty of warm water and other means for immediate relief, right at hand. Fortunately, again, though she had to endure several hours of excruciating pain, she was spared any permanent damage to her eyes.

"'Mrs. Brown's' experinece shows strikingly how very important it is to read the label before using any kind of drug or medicine," Dr. R. L. Swain, Deputy Drug Commissioner of the Bureau of Food and Drugs of the State Department of Health, remarked in telling the story. "Incidentally," Dr. Swain continuer, "the story is a true one, and it is only one of many similar happenings that have been brought to the attention of this Bureau recently. Luckily for 'Mrs. Brown' her experience had a happy ending. But the careless handling of drugs does not always end that way. It is more likely to cause not only agonizing suffering, but frequently is responsible for unnecessary and irreparable damage and even death.

"The incident is a reminder, too, of the old, old adage regarding a place for everything in its place. In the haste and hurry of our present way of living, the medicine chest is likely to have scant attention. It is a convenient place for dumping odds and ends of medicines and drugs—a place to reach into when emergency aid is needed for suddetn illnesses or household accidents. But it is not until something like 'Mrs. Brown's' experience occurs, that it is regarded as a source of possible danger.

"If you have not cleaned out your medicine chet recently, don't wait until housecleaning time to get at it. Cet rid of the old things that you have no further use for; arrange the rest so that you can find them when you need them; separate the ones that may be a source of danger from the rest; place them so that you can see the labels and READ THE LABEL BEFORE YOU USE ANY OF THEM."

BACK TO THAT HAPPY LAND

A Spaniard, an American, and a Scotsman were discussing what they would do if they awoke one morning to discover that they were millionaires.

The Spaniard said he would build a bull ring.

The American said he would go to Paris to have a time.

The Scotsman said he would go to sleep again to see if he could make another million.

SHOPPING JEFFERSON'S

Isn't it lucky that March is about ready to get into this relay race, because I don't mind telling you I've begun to feel right peckish about winter. Maybe the rest of you notice an urge creeping over you to tear up the furniture, slap the children and kick the cat. You know what I mean?

Well, anyway an eminent nerve specialist has remarked that if more women would move the furniture around in Spring, change the draperies and re-cover the chairs, there would be fewer divorces, fewer psychopathic cases and less need for hand-cuffs to keep a man home.

As a matter of fact I agree with him. How CAN people live year in and year out with every piece of furniture always in the same old place, and the same old color scheme, and the same old upholstery.

Goodness! Let's do something about it this month. Get some new material at Jefferson's and fix up some new draperies, slip covers, bed spreads, anything and everything that can be changed.

If you aren't good at planning color schemes, come on down to Jefferson's and I'll do it with you. Look at that new plaid pink in the window, green, brown and white. A swell color scheme. And what stunning bedroom curtains or slip covers this would make, bound with green and brown tape.

Another new piece of cotton print is a navy blue with cunning prim pink roses and white dots on it. Imagine a boudoir chair slip, covered in this trimmed with rose colored ball fringe.

There's a new yellow and white all-over print too that would work into a dozen color schemes. Come on, we'll help. Let's do things!

LYDIA LEE.
