THE SQUADRON'S LOG

Small craft boating centers around Quaker Neck Wharf.

The passing of the sail boat, and the lack of interest shown by the younger generation only a few years ago was bemoaned by the older men.

Whenever the "Island Blossom" broke out her sails, the older men always scrambled for a place on the boards, because, as they put it, "the young people did not know anything about sailing."

As a matter of fact, the younger generation never had a chance to sail until the regeneration of small sailing craft two or three years ago.

Now they sail circles around the old timers.

Impromptu sailing races will be found in progress near Quaker Neck almost and breezy Sunday.

Older members of the Squadron and fishing boats temporarily turned pleasure craft make a good gallery.

The Ingersol boys come out from Jarret Creek, the Woods-brother and sister-sail over from Indian Town, and Bill Greeb puts from Deep Point.

Comegy's Bight contributes an assortment of boys and girls from the Kellog Smith Camp, and Bill Baker's red head to liven things up.

Bill has a numerous fleet. His latest love in a Barnegat sneak box.

For its size and youth, Bill's Barnegat has had a checkered career.

Its debut was made at a raffle held by the Chester River Yacht and Country Club during regatta season.

The raffle was held to raise funds for the regatta. A Barnegat was chosen for the raffle to lure the youth of the community into the sport of sailing.

The fly in the ointment was the large number of chances taken by visiting yachtsmen.

Suppose the Barnegat should leave the Chester River!

Little Tommy Massey was found to be the winner when the drawing came off.

The deep laid plot had worked. Sentiment slopped over.

Hauled out of bed, Tommy was brought to the Club to receive his boat. Exspectantly, the crowd stood around to help him celebrate.

It was every person's affair to shout, "You won the boat, Tommy."

Tommy stood blinking and saying nary a word. Half asleep, he had no idea what it was all about.

Mass enthusiasm flopped like a pricked balloon.

When everyone had decided things were too dull to endure longer, and tentative movement toward adjournment were in order, suddenly Tommy found that he was awake after all and not dreaming.

A whoop like that nine-year-old let out has never since been heard around that club house.

So the balloon filled up again, and the raffle was a success.

Tommy christened the Barnegat "Elizabeth," in honor of Miss Brown who had drawn the winning ticket.

It looked for a while as though "Sue Bert" was going to be a has been.

Big Tom Massey volunteerd to teach Tommy how to sail the new boat. Everything went pretty well for a time a short time.

Not far from the Massey wharf, "Elizabeth" capsized.

Some say Big Tom thought Tommy was too young to own a tricky racing craft. Others say "Sue Bert" was jealous.

Be that as it may, "Elizabeth" changed ownership, and became the property of H. G. Hartman.

R. H. Collins, Jr., sailed "Elizabeth" in the proper race at the next regatta.

That was when Hynson Rogers won the clock for a prize, that Mrs. Rogers has to wind every day.

A "Half Pint," lead Captain Hartman astray.

"Elizabeth" cast off from her moorings and moved down river to Comegy's Bight.

She is in good hand now, and she has almost eliminated all other rivals for Bill's affections.

That flapping gadget at the end of the club wharf is a sunshade. Captain Brooks is having the "Jane" conditioned. First Mate Brooks will soon be home from school.

A flock of martins have turned seagoing, according to Dock Inspector F. Fish hawks roosting on cross arms, and martins nesting in cock pit are bad enough, but the limit of patience is reached when bats hang themselves up for a siesta.

Last reports have it that the martins are on the Johnson cruiser "May Boy II."

Oh, well, the Johnsons like lots of company.

"Waiter," scolded the fussy diner, "this chicken is terrible! Send in the manager right away!"

"It's no use, mister,' replied the waiter. "He won't eat it either."

The Wayside Poet

By J. Thomas Price

Happy Days Are Here Again

It's easy to get folks to stop
And listen to your tales of woe;
They'll weep and whine and stew and fret,
And then their onward way they go
And tell to every one they meet,
The same old story blue and sad,
Until they've taken all the joy
And courage, that their brother had.

It's always easy to attract
Attention, by your tale of gore,
They'll listen to you criticise,
The men who would good times restore ;
But let us change this method vile,
And once again take up the strain,
Of sunshine, joy and happiness,
For happy days are here again.

Instead of talking of hard times,
And calling out the fire alarm,
Go milk your cows and feed the pigs,
And then go paint your house and barn.
And when your neighbor comes around,
Just talk with all your might and main
About the good times just ahead,
For Happy Days are here again.

Let's plow the fields and sow the grain,
And plant the cabbages and kale,
The man who works in honest toil,
In God's good time will sure prevail ;
I'm sure that God still rules above,
He sends the sunshine and the rain,
Take courage, then, and let us sing,
For Happy Days are here again.
