KENT COUNTY

Kent County is full of memories of old colonial times. Quaker Neck one of Kent's peninsulas between the Chester River and Lankford Bay, was the home of the early Quakers in the County. A Quaker Church and graveyard stood there for many years being a branch of the yearly meetings established by the great Quaker William Penn. For a long time this was the centre of religious and social life, Notable among those who lived there being the Browns and the Trews, families closely connected by ties of blood and mutual interests.

Another Quaker Church stood on a rising hill near the village of Lynch, shaded by a grove of trees. This old church has been torn down, but the grove still remains as a reminder of the past. One of the prominent members of this old church was named John Lynch and it was for him that the village of Lynch was named. Still Pond is a progressive little town which one passes on its way to the bay. It is said that Francis Asbury the great Methodist pionier established a preaching place here, and it is thought to be the oldest Methodist Church on the Eastern Shore, the original Church being built during the Revolutionary war. This town is named from a creek near by which, they say, never freezes however cold, the weather, and is always still.

I. U. Church is near by. This church was built in 1765. It too, stands in a lovely grove of trees. In the church yard lies the body of Philip Reed, the hero of the Battle of Caulkfield. An historic cement wall surrounds this yard. This wall was built through the efforts of the late Rev. Sewell Hepburn and his vestry, descendants of the families whose names are written there, being contributors.

On the way to Still Pond one passes through the village of Worton. Worton and its neighborhood is rich in historic interest for here at Howells Point lived Colonel Thomas Howell at whose house as early as 1674 were held the first sessions of the Baltimore County Courts. Here, too, the original lord of Worton Manor received from Lord Baltimore the first rights to hold courts-leet and baron in this part of the Eastern Shore. Nearby is Shrewsbury Neck on the colonial road between Philadelphia and Rock Hall ferry. One pauses here to to visit old Shrewsbury Church. The first church was built in 1691. It is said that the funds for building it were raised by a lottery. The present Church was built in 1832. In its church yard are many old stones that have stood though two centuries. Much of the lettering is effaced by time, but one reads above the graves of Jervis and Hanna Spencer, who died on the same day at the ages of thirteen and sixteen, the following verse:

"Farewell our friends and parents dear
We are not dead but sleepeth here
Our debts are paid, our graves you see
Therefore prepare to follow we."

A tomb there is most interesting, the tomb of Gen. John Cadawalder. Though a Philadelphian by birth he spent all his life after the Revolution here. He was a warm personal friend of Washington and it was he that discovereted the author of the Conway. Cabal, a scheme to take away the office of Commander and chief of the Army from Washington and give it to Gen. Gates. He made the conspirators confess their treason and give up their commissions. Among the many rectors of this old church the name of the Rev. Father Martin esteemed and loved by all his parishioners, still lives in the hearts of the congregation though he has been at rest many years.

CROWN PRINCESS CECILLIE

Although much has been said to the detriment of the German people one thing can be said of them. Their family life as a rule is above reproach. Especially among the princesses who are taught that their lives must be pure and good as an example to the people. In reading the life of Cecilie, the wife of the exCrown Prince of Germany we find though exiled for a time on a little fisherman island, she believed firmly that God sent the Emperors and their sons to be example to the people. So she went about training her sons to be leaders. She sent them to the public school that they might become democratic and not snobbish. She encouraged them to make friends of the simple folk. And she has succeeded in this plan for the young princes are very popular in Germany. She has written a book of memories, telling of the details of their simple life, and dwelling on the virtues of each member of her family. She also dwells upon incidents of her former life. In fact it is a book that has been eagerly read by the German Women and the Princess is an ideal woman in their eyes.

SIMPLER STYLES ARE WORN

A general toning down is the effect given by the new clothes that Paris is sponsoring for daytime wear. Shoulders still are broad, but less exaggerated. Skirits are straight and slim of line, and very simple. Often they have concealed pleats that give ease in walking without altering the straight slenderness of the silhouette.

If you choose to break the skirt line you may do so with a peplum, a straight one, either short or long, that gives the flattering effect of the two-piece dress.

Sleeves at first glance appear simpler. There is no longer the striving for effect that marked the first of the new sleeves. But they are very elaborate as to details of workmanship.

As to materials for daytime—there are all sorts of silks and wools, and linens and cottons will be high-lighted during the summer months.

Linen Crash Coats

Molyneux's linen crash coats to be worn over dark dresses are among the most important fashions that have come out of Paris this season. And to accompany these, or whole costumes in the natural linen shade, Heim is introducing handbags of natural colored parchment or linen.

Lacquered fabrics are in high favor, used chiefly for little jackets, sashes and trimmings, rather than for whole costumes. Lacquered clokys, where only the upper part of the blister receives the high finish, are smart.

In this connection it is interesting to note that patent leather footwear is again in favor, perhaps because it goes so well with these lacquered effects in dress.

Hints for the Household

FOR JUNE
BY BETTY WEBSTER

Do You Know That:

1. A pinch of salt added to egg whites makes them easier to beat to the desired stiffness

2. Fudge will always be smooth if one or two tablespoonsful of corn syrup are cooked with the other ingredients?

3. An aspirin tablet placed in the water in which dropping flowers are standing will revive the blooms in a quite remarkable manner?

I wanted to dip some faded silk articles the other day and upon attempting to purchase a dye which had always annoyed me because it cloored the lace trimming as well as the silk body of the garment, I learned from (Druggist's Name) that there is a wonderful new product that tents only the silk and leaves the cotton lace trimming in its original hue.
