FURROWS

BY JOSIAH ALLEN WEATHERBY

There wuz quite a gatherin down at Tom Barclay's store one night last week and somebody said something about what we wuz goin to do with our young people. Zack spoke up and said it warn't a question of what we would do about them, it wuz a question of what they would do with us. And I reckon he's about right. There ain't much we can do about them except keep on spendin money to pay fer their schoolin, and to pay their gasoline bills, and clothes and such like. But it ain't their fault if they ain't no account on the farm.

On account of this here school consolidation business they are sent to a school in town and don't git a chance to learn nothin about life on the farm, and the responsibilities of farm life. From the ages of six to seventeen they are out of touch with work, and what they are taught in the schools has to do more with life in towns and cities than it does with life where they git their bread and butter.

But what can we do about it Two members of our Board of Education lives in town and when we try to keep our little country school from bein closed we are overruled and so the children have to go to town to school. They say the consolidated school is better fer the children. They have better teachers and better buildins and better supervision. Better fer what It all depends on who is thinkin about the better. It ain't better fer the farm homes that them children come from, because all of this here consolidated town school education ain't doin nothin but makin our children dissatisfied with livin out in the country, and makin them want to go to the city to live where they can git so much better "advantages."

When they git old enough to go to High School they want to run around in automobiles with the town young people and have a good time. They stay out late at night goin to parties and beaches and dances, and they learn to drink licker and be smart. Then they have to sleee late next mornin, and so on. There ain't many farm children that knows much about work any more. They are too busy havin a good time.

When they finish High School they must be sent to college. The times demand that they be cultured and so their parents spend a lot of money sendin them to college to learn how to be engineers, lawyers, doctors, dentists, and architects. What they learn is more ways to have a good time. A lot of the boys study chemistry and when they are t hrough they can't tell you when your soil is sour, nor what to do about it. Their teachers is all city educated and so they teach city education. And so it goes with our children.

"Well," says Jed, 'it ain't the fault of the young people." (Jed aint got no children.) "You parents is as much to blame as anybody else. You go ahead every election and vote fer the town politicians and they control the schools at the dictation of the State politicians and they are all city fellers, mostly lawyers, and so you have to reap the results of sowin your own folly."

And then, besides that' you ain't tried to take no hand in education your children. The wimmen do all the cookin and sewin, and the men don't take time to show the boys how to do farm work and so neither the boys nor the girls know how to do anything except what they learn at school, and a lot of them can't do that very well. Farm men is too busy farmin to take any interest in their boys and the farm wimmen is too busy cookin and sewin to take any interest in their girls, and so the schools has to try to do something fer 'em.

"The time to begin a child's education is in the cradle and if it is started right it will most likely end right. But if you take more interest in your pigs, chickens, horses, and cattle than you do in your children you can't blame the children fer not bein what you would like 'em to be. That's my philosophy."

"Well," says Zeke, "you may be right, Jed, and I reckon me and Ma is a right smart to blame about our children. But you ain't answered the question yet as to what we are goin to do about 'em." "Well," says Hiram, "I reckon after all is said and done, I'll try to git enough money together to send my boy to college this fall, and let him try to find out what he wants to do to make a livin when he gits through bein educated."

IT'S TO YOUR INTEREST TO BE INFORMED.

The Government has imposed a tax of 4.2c per pound on all processed cotton. This tax goes into effect August 1st, 1933 and will tend to increase the price of all merchandise made of cotton.

We have until September 1st—the time allowed by the Government—in which to sell cotton merchandise without the tax.

Because we wish, at all times, to keep our patrons informed, so that they may protect themselves in buying, we are announcing that cotton goods should be bought prior to September 1st.

EVERY THING MADE OF COTTON WILL BE AFFECTED BY THE TAX

Nearly all our cotton goods, underwear, hosiery, towels, sheets, overhalls, shirts, pants, yard goods, etc., were bought on about 6c cotton. Cotton is now around 10½c per pound. The new 4.2c tax will make it still higher.
